TO THE
Equal READER.

I Desire thee, Good Reader, (if thou must needs be judging) to suspend thy Censure till thou hast read the last Line of this little Book; or, if thou thinkest it not worth thy while to read all, prethee let me beg of thee not to meddle with it at all. For that which may to a slight glance on single pieces and Paragraphs seem disjoynted and irrelative, will perhaps in the whole appear (to a steady Eye) to have suitable Symmetry and due Connexion.

Some things, and those of moment too, I have but touch't with short Hints, as leaving the rest to the enlargement and amplification of thy better Ingenuity.

Brevis esse laboro, obscurus fio. Horat.

I design no Contest or Cavil in this Pygmie-Treatise, but a slight and sudden Pourtraict in Miniature of naked Truth, as she lately appeared to the Authour in a thoughtful Retirement of his for a few days. If therefore some Lines in this Draught seem (to Expert Artists) but very meanly descriptive of the Charms and divine Excellencies of her immortal Beauty, they must pardon the young Limner, since so much dazling Lustre might possibly confound found him, and make his unpractiſed hand ſhake.

Totus tremo horreóque poſtquam aſpexi hanc. Terent.

And beſides, this is but an Eſſay of Art, mere Trial of Skill, and the firſt time that his Pencil hath been publick.

Thou knoweſt, Reader, that let Sham-truths be drawn as ſeverally as mens fancies and humours pleaſe, (yet) ſhe herſelf hath nevertheleſs one regular, uniform, eternal Face. And there is moſt certainly ſuch a thing as right Reaſon, thô rational men (which I'le tell thee is very odde and amazing) by the very ſelf-ſame pretended Guide follow ſeveral diſtinct tracks, and all but one Erroneous.

But

But thou maist as well argue, that the Pole-star is not steady, since many are bewilder'd and bemir'd by an Ignis fatuus, as rashly suspect true Reason, because now adays Errours of all sorts do impudently assume its shape.

And there is as undoubtedly such a thing as true Religion, although ('tis monstrous to consider that) we are at this very day, after near 1700 years acquaintance, as hotly disputing where, and what she is, as if no man yet had ever had a full and perfect view of her face.

This makes some licentious persons now a daies, willing to suspect that all Religion is but the general Laws of Nature, and (at the best) they reduce Christianity it self to the first stage from whence it long ago ſet out, viz. Common Morality.

Diſputes, Doubts, and Conteſts will, I fear, never ceaſe, as long as Ambition, Avarice, and Impiety bear ſway in the world. But ſhould perverſe differences by endleſs ſuperfetations ſwarm ſtill daily more and more (which God prevent) yet may the moſt doubtful ignorant Soul take ſafe Sanctuary in this laſt reſerve of irrefragable Argument, viz. to follow ſtill with generous and ſtedfaſt duty, our Royal, our Noble, our Honourable, and our Reverend Learned Leaders, (till we can demonſtrate that they are in the wrong:) for thus at the very worſt we can hazard but a poſſible, pardonable miſtake, and that too in dutiful proſecution of our Chriſtian Obedience, 1 Pet. 2. 13, 14.

To the Equal Reader.

To conclude, Reader, 'tis my hearty wish, that the meanness and impertinence, the brevity and narrowness of this weak shallow discourse (that follows) may not in the least eclipse the glory of its Illustrious Title: For I designed at first (however I have failed in the publication) to speak to no body, of no body, and for no body but my self. All its Errours I am ready to acknowledge, which I fear are not a few; it being the Product of a dull melancholy Retreat, and the hasty Abortive Result of a labouring minde, without borrowing the usual help and concurrence of other mens thoughts: I only am therefore blameable and responsible for all the mistakes.

I easily foresee, Reader, that some malevolent persons will (with railing railing and detraction) tell thee, that my very handling it hath ſoiled the dignity of the ſubject. 'Tis true, I cannot prevent uncharitable Aſperſions; but to the wiſe, the good, and moderate, I ſay, What man knoweth the things of a man, ſave the ſpirit of man that is in him? 1 Cor. 2. 11. As for the reſt,

Odi profanum Vulgus & arceo.

Reli-

RELIGIO CLERICI.

IT prov'd matter of no small wonder to a good old Heathen, when he obſerved ſuch various appearances of different Opinions, Humours and propenſions in his Countrymen of Greece; eſpecially too when he conſidered how that all theſe Contrarieties and Diſproportions proceeded from men begot, born, and bred in the ſame Climate, under the ſame Laws, Conſtitutions, and Cuſtoms, and the ſource of all whoſe Inclinations and paſſions reſulted from one common ſimplicity of the very ſame ſpecifick humane nature. But if he was puzled in the reſolution of this ſcruple then, to what a far higher degree of aſtoniſhment would his Admiration have riſen, if he had lived in theſe days of ours, when (as if ſome extraordinary malignant Conjunction junction in the Heavens did in ſpite produce a general diviſion on Earth, eſpecially) in our poor Iſland there are as many different Paſſions and Affections, Plots and Agitations, Factions and Faſhions, Opinions and Religions, almoſt as men. And when too the Reaſons and Advantages for Unity and Agreement both in Principle and Practice, are far greater, and of a ſtamp more divine, than ever our Heathens Age or Countrey could pretend to.

There are two or three Conſiderations, that might eaſily remove all this mans Amazement at the different Phænomena's of his Countrymens Carriage and Converſation.

For, to be begotten and born in the ſame way and manner, Educated in the ſame Country, and wearing all the ſame common humane nature, are concurrences 'tis true that might happily cauſe ſome faint reſemblances, but could not reaſonably be expected to create ſuch a Unity of temper, as to councounterballance those many other accidents that urge the contrary.

The way of Mans Generation, and its attending Circumstances, seem alike, 'tis true; but without doubt there is a certain Magical Influence of nature (derived from Celestial Motions, or Ex traduce) that tempers us all diversly in our very fieri, and gives each of us a several tincture whilst we lye loose in our first principles: and thus each Individual being blended in a different fashion by Natures Myſterious Art (as I may ſay) it proves as difficult to find two Conſtitutions, as two Faces exactly alike.

From this various Contexture proceed our reſpective humours and Complexions, which often prove a more forcible cauſe of our Opinions and Paſſions, and of the diſſimilitudes and contrarieties of them, than bare Reaſon and Free-will: It certainly ſtrongly influences thoſe faculties in their operations, and in a greater meaſure too, than many many weak and unwary Mortals apprehend, to whom ignorance in this point proves oftentimes a most unspeakable delusion and prejudice.

From this secret work of our first nature 'tis, that Man is, (as it were) a Species to Man, and our difference is more than that of Numerical.

And by this means our Heathens Countrymen, (having no infallible rule of Knowledge, nor steady guide of their Actions) might well be as different in their Opinions and Practices, as they were in Natural Complexion, by which their Reason and Will was so strongly led and byassed.

For alas, their Reason was dull and blunt, having no better edge than what it procured by frequent Collision and reflection on its self; by all which notwithstanding, it could never arrive (even in the best of them) to so much brightness and clearness, as to guide and fix them in the one steady Truth, (in pursuit of which they ran into a thou-thouſand Superſtitious & Idolatrous Errours) nor to ſo much ſtrength as to hold them to one conſtant regular Tenor of Goodneſs and Juſtice.

Nor indeed was it poſſible it ever ſhould; for they poor Creatures had as large a doſe of Natutural Corruption and infection derived from their unknown Parent Adam, as we, and yet were deſtitute of thoſe helps and antidotes that have by Gods grace allaied the mortal malignity of the venome in us, and leſſen-ed much that dominion and power, which Errour and Vice naturally had over the Reason and Will of all men before the appearance and Doctrine of the holy Jesus.

But again, my honest Heathen never thought of the vast number of their respective Gods and Temples, where each man worshipped this or that Deity as his fancie led him, or the Choice and Custom of the City or Country directed and required: surely no small difference in mens Manners

ners and Opinions arose from this.

But farther still, Greece was Canton'd out into many petty Polities, and independent Commonwealths, governed by their proper distinct Laws and Constitutions: this too must needs create dissimilitudes as to Civil Observances, Customs, Practices, and Interests; though the common Education of the Grecians, as to the main, might be much alike, which he urges, &c.

And lastly, the several parts men acted in their re-respective Political capacities, and the many different Occurrences and Emergencies that daily attend diversly the Life and Action, Commerce and Business of each particular person, must accordingly modifie the Manners, Qualities, and Fashions of men.

When I weigh these Circumstances in my Authours Age and Country, truly his wonder ceases to be mine, and a far greater arises: Miror magis undique nostris usque adeo turbatur agris.

Virgil. Ecl. 1.

I wonder much more at the many diverſities and diviſions in our own Climate, this poor Iſland, where moſt or all of the other reaſons and occaſions of difference wholly ceaſe: And I looſe my ſelf in a Maze and Labyrinth of thought, whilſt I ſtrive to purſue the genuine cauſe of our divers Opinions and Practices, when (as one would think) all Reaſons imaginable concur for Union and Harmony.

We acknowledge all one God and Jeſus, and have have all one revealed will of that God done into plain good Engliſh, free of diſtracting ambiguities (like the Heathen Oracles) or perplext and obſcure ſignifications.

We have all one and the ſame gracious King and Governour, the ſame Laws, Statutes and Ordinances, made by one conſent of our ownſelves, and not impoſed at the Arbitrary diſcretion of another: We have all one common Intereſt to preſerve Property and Peace, and are all ſhut up by Na-

Nature, and inclos'd in one Iſland; as if ſhe deſigned univerſal Concord and Likeneſs, in excluſion of all Forreign varieties and mixtures.

We have all one common Nature as Men, conſiſting of Reaſon and Will, the Eſſential Faculties of one ſimple Eſſence the Soul; their reſpective objects too are One, True, and Good: And we have all equally one Infallible Guide to both theſe, the Book of God.

And yet from all theſe Eſſential ſimplicities, environ'd viron'd on all ſides with Circumſtances pointing at Unity; through an odd Caprice of ill manage, and by a monſtrous Equivocal Generation, ariſe thouſands of diverſities.

The Reaſon of Men (in itſelf undoubtedly the ſame) ſhall yet, in diſquiſition of its own object, Truth, make innumerable Excurſions; I mean, as many men ſhall have ſo many opinions about a ſingle Verity; which is impoſſible, if they did not act in ſpite of Nature, and argue more with their

Will

Will than Underſtanding.

For, Poſitis omnibus ad agendum requiſitis, Truth diſplayed is as much the neceſſary object of our Underſtanding, as Light is of Eyes open and ſound.

I confeſs endleſs Evaſions, and contrary plauſibilities may be oppoſed to Truth, though never ſo clear; but 'tis apparent then, that Hypocriſie and Subtlety, Arrogancy and Obſtinacy, not Reaſon or Judgment, hold the Cudgels. And hence ſwarms

that daily ſpurious Iſſue of Anſwers upon Anſwers, and Rejoynders upon Rejoynders, which our Modern Diſſenters oppoſe to the Sober Aſſertions and Loyal Vindications of our Church and King. Anſwers indeed they call them, and they are ſo as far as the Title-Page goes, but no farther, alas!

I have methinks ſo good an opinion of the Judgment of two or three of the chief Oracles that head and lead our modern Schiſmaticks, that I will never grant their private thoughts thoughts and publick writings to run parallel: ſuch ſtrong and plain truths as are daily urged to them, muſt of neceſſity carry Confutation (and ſhould of right Conviction too) along with them.

No, no, they are loth to leave their old Aſſociates, and a ſhame-fac'd reluctancy reſtrains them from giving themſelves the Lye: They will not now deſert the old Cauſe, though ſhe have loſt the field Spiritual and Temporal too; nor lay down their Weapons, though Con-

Conquered, and generouſly received to Grace.

But by their leave, if this be true, the Caſe is worſe and worſe; their Faith is Faction, their Reaſon Rancour; and their Courage Contradiction. And we muſt beware of ſuch ſly Combatants; for though they have loſt the Field, they may ſtill by Stratagem gain the Battle: Such Exploits have been afore. We fairly Conquered them once, 'tis true; but not following Victory home, we now run the ſame Fate, and ſuf-ſuffer the ſame Judgment the Iſraelites did, by permitting the Canaanites to dwell among them, viz. many of us have been enticed to go a whoring after their Gods, and as the Angel told the people at Bochim, they are left to be thorns in our ſides. Judg. Chap. 2. v. 3.

'Tis now 1700 years very near, ſince Chriſtianity was promulgated; and not much leſs, ſince the true Model and Platform of it was delivered into our hands, to be for ever the Architype, Rule and and Standard of Faith and Practice. And yet from this plain and uniform Model, designed for the help and rule of our Edification, have in all Ages been drawn by the warm fancies of busie Enthusiasts, and the like, such monstrous Medlies, and odd Landskips of Opinions, as (in another kind) the most extravagant Conceptions of Poets and Painters have never equal'd. And truly I think one and the other have some grounds much alike for their Whimsies;

I am ſure they have each of them had too much of one priviledge, and that is the Quidlibet audendi Poteſtas. Horat: de art. Poet.

Chriſtianity, I ſay, is now almoſt 1700 years old; and though it, as its Author, is ever one and the ſame, yet what by the Supineneſs of its true, and what by the devices of its pretended Profeſſours, it is at this day ſo overgrown with thorns and briars, and the moſſy Excreſcences of rotten and Corrupted Skulls, that (had not our God been very very gracious) we ſhould hardly diſtinguiſh and diſcern its genuine beauty and Native Luſtre through the Rubbiſh and Barricade of Schiſm and Hereſie.

I always thought Gods holy word ſo plain, that to invent an Heterodox Doctrine, we muſt do a violence to that, and our own Reaſon too: And yet what nice diſſections have been made of theſe Scriptures, by too bold and curious Inſpectours into the Secrets of God? How many Texts have they ſet upon upon the Rack, and endeavoured by cruel and unnatural distortions, to make them say as they would have them, and confess what they never knew? from whence have followed such rents and dislocations in some Members of our Religion, as (I fear) are almost become past Cure.

I would fain know what one thing material hath been discovered by the noise and bustle of all these busie and subtle Pates, that was not as well or better known in the very first Centurie. I believe that in all the whole prodigious Catalogue of Voluminous Tracts, and laboured Controversies, (enough at this day to make good St. John's Hyperbole) you cannot find one new Truth of any import or significancie to our Religion, which was not known 1500 years ago. On the contrary, I am sure they have, together with a thousand falsities, invented perplexities and empty trifles without number, ber, which the pureſt ages of Chriſtianity never dreamt of.

Joh. Chap. last v. last.

Some have ſtretcht their brains to graſp Myſteries beyond their reach, and would crowd the Infinite Eſſence, and Ineffable Attributes of that great God into the ſenceleſs rules & terms of their Schools, whom the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain.

What horrid Hereſies have men run into, by preſuming to fathome the Myſterie of the bleſſed Trinity! and whilſt they have forcibly preſt Reaſon on to take as large a ſtep as Faith, they have ſtumbled and fell, to their utter confuſion.

My humble (yet ſtedfaſt) Faith in the hidden Things of God, can reſt fully ſatisfied in the ὅτι, without preſuming (to no purpoſe) ſo far as the διότι. nay, and my Reaſon too (if it muſt needs be medling) doth here moſt juſtly acquieſce, without farther ſcrutiny, in this concluſion; 'Tis certainly ſo, becauſe God hath ſaid it.

And thus I can eaſily believe that the Godhead con-consists of Three Persons, without the help of ὑπόστασις, persona or suppositum: and the Incarnation of my Saviour is a Mystery indeed in Divinity, but none in Philosophy to me; for that tells me, 'twas as easie (to speak more humano) for the Almighty to set Nature at work in Holy Maries Womb to frame a man of her Seed, as to make a Woman out of the side of Adam.

But 'tis my opinion, that the truest Faith supersedes all arguing about the Myſteries of our Religion; and when St. Peter bids us be ready to give a reaſonable account, 'tis not of fathomleſs Secrets, but of our Hope and Faith in Jeſus. Yet that Faith (I am perſwaded) was always moſt acceptable with our Saviour, that acknowledged him with a plain and ſimple ſincerity, without a why, or wherefore: And I believe the nimble Confeſſion of Nathaniel, though upon a ſlight occaſion, was better approved of by 1 Pet. 3. 15.

Joh. 1. 49, 50.

by Christ, than the cautious proceed, and deliberate advances of Judicious Nichodemus. 3 Joh. 9.

However, I like not that high flight of the Father neither, Certum est, quia impossibile est; nor his who said, there were not Impossibilities enow in Religion for an active Faith: such Hyperbolick strains do Christianity no kindness I am sure, especially in the Mahometan and Pagan world.

For were Socrates, Cicero, cero, or Seneca now alive, I might with far better ſucceſs attempt their Converſion, by the rehearſal of Chriſts Sermon on the Mount, or St. Pauls Epiſtles, than by aſſaulting raſhly their unprepared Reaſon with the difficulties and ſeeming contradictions of the Athanaſian Creed.

It can no ways properly be ſaid, that there is any one Impoſſibility in the Bible: For if the Letter and matter of fact be true, (as it may on that ſcore juſtly claim a ſtronger ger title to verity than any Book of longer or later date, which yet we own without ſcruple) then the Conceſſion that 'twas of Divine Inſpiration eaſily follows; and then the conſequence is as neceſſary, That whatever it contains muſt be of infallible truth and certainty.

And what if we cannot ſolve its Myſteries? Their firſt deſign was to be objects of Chriſtian Faith and humble acquieſcence, not of Pert and Curious Argumentation.

If we will believe nothing, but what we can make out, and clear of doubts, (ay and ſtrong ones too) even in things obvious and familiar, and with which we converſe every day, we muſt ſhut the whole Viſible World out of doors, and ſit down content with abſolute Scepticiſm.

I declare I have as even a notion of Spirit as of Body, and underſtand Cogitation fully as well as Extenſion: I am no more privy to the Mechaniſm of my own hearts Motion, Motion, than I am to the Myſterie and feats of Memory and Imagination, or to the way how my Soul by a detachment of nimble Emiſſaries, commands my foot to move in an inſtant. In a word, I underſtand nothing of this kind by adequate and Commenſurate Science, but by Philoſophick gueſs, or Allegorick repreſentations. 11 Eccle. 5.

I remember that a now Reverend and moſt Learned Prelate, (at whoſe private Lectures I had the honour long ago to attend) tend) amongſt other moſt excellent notices, told us, that Immaterial, Infinite, and the like, were Negatives indeed in words, (for the barrenneſs of Language, and our own weakneſs and ignorance) but properly and in themſelves they were abſolute Poſitivities; and again, that their Contraries, Finite and Material, were pure Negations in reſpect of the other.

Deſcartes, who opened the way to his Philoſophy by ſtopping his Ears and cloſing his Eyes, and ſtrip-ſtripping himſelf naked to bare Cogitation, found out one Original Truth (as he thought) viz. Cogito, Ergo Sum: what a prodigious fallacie paſt upon this acute man! he might as well (in that caſe) have argued, Curro, Ergo Sum; the argument had been as good, though it lay at a little farther diſtance. Thus are we all weak and blind in Natural and Divine Secrets and Myſteries. 8 Eccle. 17.

The Canon of Holy Scripture is without doubt ſo plain, as to Eſſentials

ſentials of Faith and Practice, that I cannot perſwade my ſelf to believe there was ever ſuch a thing as Nuda Hæreſis: I am rather inclin'd to think that Secular Motives of pride, diſcontent, and avarice, raiſed the boyling ferment in ambitious and reſtleſs heads; as was moſt notoriouſly apparent in the buſineſs of Arrius. This Spirit that agitated in the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity, worketh now ſtill in the Children of diſobedience: And when good and Learned men offer offer at a Cure by publick writing or disputе, the bad succeſs and fruitleſs conſequence ſhews, that the wrong remedy is applyed; the malady lying more in the perverſeneſs of the Will, than the miſtake of the Intellect.

And by this means, Demonſtration. itſelf often fails of Conviction; and the ſtrongeſt and plaineſt Truths urged home to Schiſmaticks, ſtay not, but are ſent back daily in a faint retort, ſtuft more with weak Evaſion, and peeviſh Cavil, than Right or Reaſon. Juſt thus 'tis at this very Juncture, and (if in this caſe Inferences de facto are good conſequences) is like always to be.

I wonder that Conſtantine ſhould ſo far countenance that damnable Hereſie of Arrius, as to allow it the dangerous ſcope of a free Debate in the Council of Nice. Had not Royal Reſtraints, and legal Penalties, been a ſafer and more Orthodox way to repreſs an Errour ſo palpable, that it carried its Confutation in its its own face? No doubt but ſome Plenipotentiaries of Heaven itſelf aſſiſted at that Spiritual Treaty, yet (as far as I underſtand) their ſtrong and zealous Arguments could hardly reduce the contrary faction to an amicable and Chriſtian complyance; whom pride had fore-armed with reſolution to demur at Demonſtration, and cavil at Conviction. However, with much ado, after a tedious debate, they compoſed the Catholick Creed, that bears the name. Diſ-

Diſputes in Religion are often fruitleſs (becauſe improper) Applications, and ſerve but to increaſe the heat and feud of Opiniatours: They may indeed confirm the Right, but very rarely convince the Erroneous party.

I conceive the Emperour was in a manner forced to give this Hereſie ſo much looſe Line as a fair debate; its Contagion began to rage in the Chriſtian world, and like the Jewiſh Idolatry, it had ſeated itſelf in the high Places too: beſides, its its high pretences might incline him to think the occaſion worthy the ſolemnity of that famous confluence: for although the conteſt was comprized within the narrow compaſs of two Greek words, yet the controverted point was of no leſs importance, than the Divinity of our God and Saviour. Yet that all this was the wrong remedy for that diſeaſe, appears plainly from its breaking out with re-doubled heat and violence in the ſucceeding Reign of Conſtantius. The

The edge and keenneſs of our preſent diviſions, we may chiefly date from the late Act of Toleration: Such allowances proceed from Royal mercy and tenderneſs, 'tis true, but the miſchiefs that always enſue are innumerable, and grow to a formidable ſtature by inſenſible degrees, till at length they ſuck themſelves into a ſtate and habit ſtrong enough for Rebellion, even from the breaſts of Royal Indulgence. My opinion is, (in all deep humility) that by ſuch con-condeſcentions of Grace, Princes act againſt their own power, and elude their own Authority; they give Licenſe to worſhip the righteous God a wrong way, and eſtabliſh Schiſm in Church and State by a Law. Conceſſions of this kind Extorted (as it were) from Royal Clemency and pity may indeed confirm preſent Impunity, but cannot give Innocence to Diſſenters: To whom we may boldly and juſtly rejoyn, whenever they plead the Kings Grace, in the words of 19 Matt. 8. of our Saviour to the Phariſees, Moſes becauſe of the hardneſs of your hearts ſuffered you this, (to put away your Religion) but from the beginning it was not ſo.

'Tis now a Soleciſm in Chriſtianity to talk of a weak Brother, and Liberty of Conſcience is nonſence totidem verbis. God forbid that at this day, after 1600 years, there ſhould remain any doubts or ſcruples unreſolved in our Religion, when 'tis openly diſplaied to the view view of all men, without ſhades or obſcurities, in moſt clear and lively colours.

If the good and wholſome Act for Uniformity had continued ſtill in full force, it had in time found mens Purſes more tender than their Conſciences: At leaſt, it would have done ſo much good, that the old Pique had been buried with this Generation, and the next would have Conformed of courſe. Whereas now I fear this new Liberty hath fixt the Contagion in in the very Vitals of our diſſenting brethren, and their Children will be tainted Ex traduce.

Diſputandi pruritus eſt ſcabies Eccleſiæ, ſaid a Learned Countryman of ours: It hath certainly been a great promoter of Schiſm, and the fuel of Faction. To ſee the Elaborate follies of the ſubtile Schoolmen, and the quirks of Polemical Divinity, (what an odd word that is to affix to the plain and eaſie Religion of the meek and humble Jeſus?) their curious niceties in reſear-

ches of matters, either altogether above, or else not worth our knowledge; their pretty Mazes and Labyrinths drawn by Art in puzled and bewildred Thought; but above all, their slippery evasions, and nimble escapes, (like Hercules's Protean Antagonist) when prest hard by close and solid reasoning, this is all matter of as great diversion, as it had been to have been present at the odd posture of Circumstances in the first confusion of Tongues at Babel.

'Tis pretty to obſerve their Schools; in what order and awful ſilence non-Entities ſit ranged into Claſſes according to their proficiency or quality, and not one dares move till call'd out toSay, and then they ſpeak in the Language of Utopia. They can (with ſtrange dexterity) make an appoſite Anſwer to an unintelligible Queſtion, and will argue pro and con whole hours together, about what was never ſeen, felt, heard or underſtood. 'Tis impoſſible to poſe them; for

for when they cannot enodate your Argument, they ſerve you with a diſtinction the ſame trick that Alexander did the Gordian knot. They can as readily deſcribe the parts and proportions of a Chimæra, as you can of a man or a horſe. But their maſterpiece lies in this, they can underſtand words that ſignifie nothing, or (which is much the ſame) ſignifie they know not what; and yet they have a ſlight to make the ſame words mean any thing. But this you'll ſay is very ſtrange; take any common ordinary truth or Propoſition, ſtrip it naked of its plain Engliſh, and ſend it to be dreſt in their Tire-room, its Port and Garniture ſhall immediately become ſo majeſtick, that (though you were never ſo well acquainted with it before) you ſhall gaze at it with as much Ignorance, as the honeſt Countryman did at the Powder of Album Græcum, before he underſtood the trick on't.

Theſe men can baffle Truth in what faſhion and

and to what degree you pleaſe; as alſo advance a Falſitie how far you will, to probabile, veriſimile, and (upon a good occaſion) to abſolute demonſtration.

From their Repoſitories, men of ambitious and working Pates have been furniſhed with Tools and Inſtruments of all ſorts and ſizes, to form and faſhion, file and vary Doctrines and Opinions ſuitable to the deſign and work in hand: Here are Moulds fitly prepared to caſt any Schiſm or Hereſie in; and in short, all Enginery and Artillery that the Church (militant too much in this sence) can possibly want upon any occasion, they can readily produce out of their Polemick Magazines.

With what sly and subtle Artifices these men have infected Christianity, or furnished others with means and methods of doing so, is beyond my power to declare; yet I doubt not but the spring and head of our many modern Sects and Schisms might in some measure be

be traced up to these Fountains.

The Romanists I am sure are very sensible of the great advantages their monstrous Tenets receive from hence; they observe it seldome to fail at a dead lift; by its assistance they often confound the simple, and not seldom amuse even the more knowing. However, they can make a safe retreat hither, when beaten out of the field; and their boldest Champions, to avoid the danger of a close pursuit, muce nim-bly, and ſculk in the ſubterfuges of this thorny wilderneſs.

It comes in my head here, to ſay, (though 'tis not much to the purpoſe, you'll think, but that's all one; and yet you may perceive it bears ſome ſquint relation to this diſcourſe too) I have often admired why Ariſtotles Philoſophy ſhould be (to ſo great a degree) the chief. darling of ſo many Learned and Reverend men among us. They deduce all things from his Text, reduce all to him, as the infallible Test of universal truth. I am but a very mean Judge, I confess, but yet I know there are some things in him very weak and shallow, many palpable Errours and notorious falsities; and in what he is most Excellent, the same hath been long ago, and is now found in two or three other Languages, without any the least dependance on the Philosopher, and this in a far greater degree of perfection too. But alas, the choisest truths and beſt Obſervations in Italian, French, Latin, or Engliſh, reliſh not near ſo well, nor have they half the poynancy, as when ſerved up with Grecian garniſh after the Attick Mode.

I had ſometime ſince an occaſional diſcourſe with a good and Learned man, who, upon quoting ſome ſaying of Ariſtotles, immediately (with emphatick admiration) ſubjoyns, The very ſame, ſaith he, with that of the Apoſtle! I have quite forgot the words, but 'twas ſome ſome moral-doctrinal Precept I remember, which a thouſand men might have ſpoken as well as the Philoſopher; ſuch Propoſitions being (we all know) the impreſſes and common notions of Rational Nature: but Ariſtotle ſpoke Greek too, and therefore imitated the Apoſtle a twofold way.

Who would have thought that old Homer ſhould ever have arrived to ſo much Honour and Excellency as Evangelizans imports! that late good man and excellent Gre-

Grecian was in ſo high a degree his admirer, that thinking he deſerved better preferment than the firſt of the firſt rank of Poets, he would needs place him among the Goſpellers too. We are all apt to admire, then dote upon, and at length Idolize this or that part of Learning that hath moſtly engaged our Time, Labour, and Study: The reaſon is obvious, becauſe in that we can play a game to advantage with any Antagoniſt. So natural even to the beſt of men is Vain-glory. Not

Not but that I am a great admirer of Learning, and adore it at an awful distance almost to Superstition: Learning, I say, not in hypothetick fancies, dry empty Notions, and fruitless researches, but in solid practical Truths, reductive to the service of God, and the innocent profits and pleasures of Humane Life. The rest may be the diversion and accomplishment of such as enjoy Wealth, Ease, and Vacancy: but for my part, I declare, I had rather feel the the warmth of the Sun, when I am very cold, than know whether Ptolomie, Tycho, or Copernicus come neareſt the truth. For when Wiſe and Learned men are poor and hungry, (which God knows too often happens) I obſerve that they ſtudy more to find out a good Dinner, than the Longitude; and to Compaſs a round ſum of Money, rather than to ſquare the Circle.

I obſerve too, that young men fledg'd and flown from their neſt of Notions in the Univerſity, ty, when they come abroad quickly find, that Mathematical Demonſtrations, and Logical Axioms are the ſame neither genere, ſpecie, nor numero, with Meat, Drink, and Clothes; this engages them to a ſtudy of that which bears a nearer relation to ſelf-preſervation, and they (for the moſt part) take the old road of Mankind to purchaſe honeſt profit, and the Comforts of life, without much conſulting their old Acquaintances Ariſtotle, Plato, Deſcartes, or the like.

like. For as a Modern Satyriſt ſaith well in that,

Forcing our Nature never yet did good;
We muſt fall back to our old fleſh and blood.

This puts me in minde of the real diſgrace and detriment our Church ſuffers, by reaſon of the ſuperfluous number of young Divines; ſome with ſlender parts and mean Abilities; others without Experience and Conduct; and in theſe latter, a rude maſs of barren ren unadjuſted Notions, gives ſuch an unſavory daſh, and ridiculous odd kind of Air to their diſcourſe and deportment, as always minds me of what Charron ſaith, Faire quelque choſe en Clerk, c'eſt le faire en Sot. De la Sageſſe Liv. 3. Chap. 13.

But the worſt is, that many are without Employment ſuitable to the great Character they bear, how ſlightly ſoever eſteemed of in our degenerate days. From each of theſe, many great miſchiefs and inconveniences follow.

How

How many are forced to 1 Sam. 2. take ſhelter as
36. Tutours or Chaplains in ill-affected Families, where their Stipend being often Arbitrary, and their dependance almoſt neceſſary, they are obliged to do their work after what faſhion they pleaſe, in whoſe hands their Salary and livelihood wholly depends: And when they have ſerved the turn they were firſt entertained for here, (or perhaps for ſome little peeviſh Caprice of the Godly old Lady) they are are forced to march off with a cold Compliment: But if in this devout Family they have gotten some proficiencie in Extempore praying, prating pretty well without the Book, and the like, they are excellently appointed to be received into some blind Assembly or petty Conventicle, at least as Probationers, and so on, &c.

Others again cross the Channel, (presuming, forsooth, that they may see fashions on free-cost) with Omnia mea mecum porto; but but when Cold and Hunger pinches, and the Philosophick Portmantle comes to be examined, not one rag or ſingle ſtiver is to be found amongſt all Bias's baggage. Then they are forced to expreſs their wants very politely in the univerſal Language, and (like Vagabond Polanders here) they beg formâ pauperis Scholaſtici at ſome Convent or Monaſtery; where (as the caſe now ſtands) the matter a hundred to one comes to a bargain, & they prove Converts: and

ſo

ſo having in time imbibed pernicious Principles, as well as learned the art of putting them in practice, fraught with miſchievous Machinations, and ſeditious deſigns, they are delegated hither.

But I fear the Air of old England doth not reduce one of twenty at their arrival to ſuch an happy reconverſion, as by eſpecial Influence it did the good Dr.

But a Maladie beyond all redreſs is the near dependance our Clergy have for the moſt part upon upon Lay-Patrons and Benefactours: The ſervile awe and confuſion that poſſeſſes the young Divine whilſt he Preaches before them, is altogether inconſiſtent with that modeſt boldneſs and temperate Aſſurance that ought (of neceſſity) to attend the Word, whether we inform or reprove. For if by chance our youth touch never ſo little upon what thwarts the private opinion, or gauls any one irregular practice of his Patron (though in never ſo general and diſtant a way)

way) he ſhall be ſure of ſuch a ſowre look, and correcting regard from his Worſhip at Dinner, as ſhall quite daſh the Countenance, and turn the ſtomack of our new dignifié, maugre the comfortable acceſſion of the late Benefice.

In this Caſe I wiſh all men were as happy as my ſelf, in bearing relation to a moſt Orthodox, Loyal, and pious honourable good Gentleman, &c.

To conclude all this, our own Souldiers for want of due pay and encoucouragement, turn often Renegadoes, and by deſerting us become ſo many freſh ſupplies to our ſworn Enemies the Pyrates of Rome and Geneva. This advantage (ſuperadded to the force of the old Pique) enables them not only to fight at diſtance, but makes them ſo hardy as to board our torn and leaky veſſel, the poor Church of England; and 'tis all ſhe can do, with invincible courage to clear her decks of theſe furious Aſſailants.

I look upon the Romiſh Religion

Religion as the exactest piece of State-Policie, and the best contrived Mysterie of infallible Rule and Dominion, that ever yet appeared in the world. I always considered it under this notion, without any other regard or relation whatever: Its subtle tenets and deep Maximes speak it such; its ways and methods to preserve and continue itself where 'tis already planted, and of propagating itself where not, do plainly shew, that the true design of it is merely Secular, contrived wholly for Temporal ends and purposes of Dominion, Avarice, Luſt, and in a word, of Univerſal Tyranny over the Souls and Bodies of Men and Women.

I verily believe its greateſt and moſt Learned Eccleſiaſtick Aſſertours ſee and know the trick well enough, though they keep the Myſterie as ſafe in the Conclave, as the Trojans did the Palladium in Minerva's Temple.

No Cabaliſts of State could e're trepan,
With ſuch firm ſubtlety as Rome's Divan,
ſaith one.

And thus the main Syſtem of their Religion being wholly relative to Political practicks, no wonder that all our Diſputes ableſt Writings, and trueſt Remonſtrances againſt them do ſo little good: They may indeed debar them from proſelyting men ſo eaſily as before; but the two Poles ſhall ſooner meet, than the ſtrongeſt Truths and Demonſtrations ſhall reduce one of the great Churchmen of Rome.

Alas, the Caſe is quite of another nature: nor do they themſelves think it worth while to enter the Liſts of publick Diſputation, or anſwer the repeated oppoſitions of our Learned Churchmen, unleſs (as our chief Diſſenters) it be to comply with the Expectations of their own Herd; and then too, the main deſign is (not to argue impartially and and ſolidly) but ſtill more and more to amuſe and intangle the poor ignorant Admirers of, An Anſwer to Dr. &c.

Si Pergama dextrâ defendi poſſent, &c. comes always in my mind, when I conſider that the preſent poſture of affairs is rather worſe than better, and at the ſame time think on the Writings of Biſhop Jewel, Laud, and thoſe other Heroe's that did and ſaid all that was poſſible almoſt, to little purpoſe alas! and pray what can we do more?

They will not ſo much as argue to ſatisfie any ſcruple of their own Diſciples; the device of Implicite Faith ſuperſedes their trouble as to that. And if by chance among them a gaul'd Conſcience offer to kick, (though never ſo ſorely pinch'd) one ſharp word or frown of the Inquiſition, ſilences the poor Soul better (to their purpoſe) than a thouſand Syllogiſms: And thus theſe men love darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds are evil.

How

How quite contrary to all this, is the proceed of our Church? how different is her Carriage? how frequent, earneſt, and tender are her applications to the Diſſenting Brethren? With what reluctancie and force to herſelf, (after all means fail) are reſtraints and penalties gently apply'd as the Ratio ultima rerum, which ſhe is far from making the Inſcription of loud and infallible Artillery?

And yet what Seditious Murmurs do theſe men return to her ſoft & paſſionate Invitations? What Innovations & Changes do they not ſecretly attempt? What evil Repreſentations of Church and Government do they not ſcatter? What ſhuffling peeviſh returns do they make to the Writings and Sermons of good and wiſe Men, in vindication of regular Piety and true Loyalty? And they are ſo bold too, as to preſs Gods holy Word for the juſtification of all this obſtinacy; but 'tis not the firſt time that Holy Scripture ture hath been the Argument, when the d ſtructi-on of the Allegatour hath proved the conſequence. 2 Pet. 3. 16.

Our Church, by applying the ſoft and gentle Remedies of Statutable puniſhments, and legal Mulcts, never intended to force groſs blindneſs, or impoſe the Tyranny of Implicite Faith on any man; but rather the quite contrary, ſhe carefully and wiſely conſidered that a little ſmarting might make the ſcales peel off from their Eyes,

& by ſome little bitterneſs ſhe deſigned no more harm to them, than Tobias did to his Father, by throwing Gall in his Eyes to make him ſee.

And here I'll preſume to inſert the words of a Learned & Reverend Gentleman now among us: We, ſaith he, that are Miniſters of the Church of England may be content; nay, we may really wiſh that all our Laity had as much true ſolid underſtanding in Religion as our Clergy. We can get no advantage by your want of knowledge,

no

no more than you can do by ours: We have no Spiritual Cheat with which to delude you, for the representing of which we should stand in need either of darkness, or of a false light. We have nothing in our publick Profession which the wisest men, the most pious Christians may not outwardly practice; nothing in our Faith which they ought not inwardly to believe. We know and are well assured, that the onely reason why our Church is not more generally embraced, and admired, mired, is, because the purity of its Doctrine, the sobriety of its Devotion, the moderation of its Discipline, the largeness of its Charity, are not more impartially and calmly examined, more generally understood.

Our Church in its Spiritual State as you are Christians, is most conformable to the rules of Christ, to the Apostolick practice, to the Primitive Institutions: In its rational State as you are Men, its Doctrines are very agreeable to the reason of Man-

Mankind; its Precepts moſt becoming the pureſt and ſtricteſt Laws of Nature, Vertue, and Morality: In its Political State as ye are Engliſhmen, its Intereſt is inſeparable from that of our Nation and Government.

We are therefore ſo far from being jealous of your moſt curious & exact ſearch into the Practice and Principles of our Church, that we deſire it; nay, we moſt earneſtly beſeech it. We are in no danger from Mens moſt ſubtle inquiry into it; we may be from their

their utter careleſneſs, and indifferency towards it.

We are not againſt any Mans ſeeing Spiritual Truths; onely we would not have the blind preſume to teach others to ſee: We would not have Men think they ſee, when they do not, which is the moſt certain way for them never to ſee at all: we would have you know as much as you can; onely we would have you believe that both you and we may know much more than we do: we intreat you to ſtrive to know all in a right right way, by ſober degrees, for right purpoſes, uſes and ends.

I will here be bold to ſubjoin by way of Corollary to the fore-going excellent words: It hath puzled my neareſt and niceſt Inquiſition, and plunged my cloſeſt ſcrutiny in deep amazement, when I have conſidered that ſo many of our Countrymen ſhould out of an odd peeviſh humour, and moſt unaccountable Caprice, forſake that ſober, decent way way of Worſhip, which the Eſtabliſhed Law preſſes, which their gracious King and Governour himſelf ſtrictly obſerves, together with the Loyal Nobility and Gentry, and the Reverend and Learned Clergy of this Land; that they ſhould (I ſay) leave theſe good, theſe great, theſe wiſe Examples, contrary to the obedient humble temper of Chriſtians, contrary to the prudence and intereſt of rational men, and contrary to the honeſt good nature of true Engliſh-

men: And all this out of a blind and ignorant complyance to the Insinuating hypocritical perswasions of a few leading prejudiced Presbyters. For, true scruple of Conscience cannot be said to urge them to this Nonconformity; not one of five hundred understanding the intrinsick state of the Question, or the true nature of the Controverted point, any more than they do Arabick: But granting that they could plead Christian Scruple, how far would even that fall ſhort of Juſtification, ſeeing that the commands to Obedience are ſo abſolute, ſo plain, ſo poſitive, and the reaſons for Nonconformity (even at beſt) ſo obſcure, ſo weak, ſo dubious? In a word, the Faith of our Separatiſts is as blind and implicite as that of the Papiſts; the deſign of their Doctrines as Subtle, Senſual, and Secular.

But to return to the Romaniſts: that the trick ſhould paſs upon the common Herd of the Ignorant and Credulous, is not not at all ſtrange, nor that the well-contriv'd Impoſture ſhould go down pretty cleverly with the middle ſort of Mankind, is it much to be wondred at; but that ſo notorious, ſo bold, ſo ſawcie a cheat, ſhould engage the Wiſe and Noble, nay Kings and Princes, to a complyance ſo mean and ſervile (as heretofore eſpecially) this is a perfect Prodigie to me.

What depth of ſubtilty is implyed in the Doctrine of the Popes Supremacy and Infallibility, the basis of implicite Faith, indisputable obedience, & absolute dependance on the Church and Court of Rome? What great and glorious Scenes of pomp, pride, and splendour, are consequential to the necessity of making all deferences and humble appeals to his Holiness?

The Doctrine of Purgatory is a most excellent bait for a wealthy sinner on his death-bed: how eagerly and zealously he exchanges his Bags for Masses, that he may not be stopt at that hot stage ſtage, but be immediately diſpatch'd to the more agreeable warmth of Abraham's boſom? Thus by a pretty kind of Platonick Chymiſtry, the ſubtle Prieſt makes real Gold, by an imaginary & fictitious fire.

But above all, to dive into and diſcover the Tempers and Inclinations, Deſigns and Contrivances, Actions and Paſſions, nay the moſt retired thoughts of Men and Women; auricular Confeſſion is an unparallel'd device: 'Tis certainly the moſt impudent Incroachment

ment and unnatural piece of Tyranny that was ever impos'd on Mankind; I mean, as 'tis abuſed and disfigured by them from its firſt good deſign and Inſtitution.

And now, you will ſay, 'tis time for me to ſpeak ſomething that bears a nearer and more particular relation to the Title-Page; truly I intended to do ſo; but at preſent I am weary, as well as you; and will end this with two words more, concerning the death of Mr. Langhorn and the late Jeſuits.

If

If the depoſitions of the Kings Witneſſes (as the Law always allows them to be, ſo) were not de facto true, and Evident; if the proceedings of the Court were not moſt impartial, juſt & ſteady, & by conſequence the Parties brought in guilty by an honeſt, unbiaſs'd, and moſt equitable Verdict; if all this (I ſay) were not ſo, then there is no Sun, Moon, or Stars, the whole viſible world is a deluſion, nor will I ever believe my ſences more: and therefore that Learned rational men at the very point of death ſhould fondly conceive, that the Popes diſpenſation or their reciprocal Abſolutions would expiate the Guilt and Crime of a Poſitive, Deliberate, Mortal Sin (I mean the ſtedfaſt abjuration of true matter of fact) this is a preſumption of that force and contradiction to the Genius of Chriſtianity, & ſo contrary to the very Eſſentials and Fundamentals of humane Nature, that I know not what to reſolve it into, but a total Dereliction of God Almighty, or elſe ſome latent Frenſie, in thoſe Delinquents. The End.

ſtage, but be immediately diſpatch'd to the more agreeable warmth of Abraham's boſom? Thus by a pretty kind of Platonick Chymiſtry, the ſubtle Prieſt makes real Gold, by an imaginary & fictitious fire.

But above all, to dive into and diſcover the Tempers and Inclinations, Deſigns and Contrivances, Actions and Paſſions, nay the moſt retired Thoughts of Men and Women, Auricular Confeſſion is an unparallel'd device: 'Tis certainly the moſt impudent Incroach-

ment and unnatural piece of Tyranny that was ever impos'd on Mankind; I mean, as 'tis abuſed and disfigured by them, from its firſt good deſigne and Inſtitution.

I will now end theſe brief Remarks on the Romiſh Religion, with one Trick more of theirs, which appeared in the Death of Mr. Langhorne and the late Jeſuits; which hath afforded matter of much diſcourſe to all, and of no ſmall wonder and amuſement to ſome. For my own part, I verily believe,

lieve, that if the Depoſitions of the King's Witneſſes (as the Law always allows and ſuppoſes them to be, ſo) were not de facto true and evident; if the Proceedings of the Court were not moſt impartial, juſt and ſteady, and by conſequence the Parties brought in guilty by an honeſt and unbiaſſed Verdict; if all this (I ſay) were not ſo, then there is no Truth or Certainty under the Sun. And therefore that Learned and Rational Men ſhould at the point of Death fondly conceive, that any Dispensation from Rome, or their reciprocal Absolutions, could possibly expiate the Guilt and Crime of a positive, deliberate, mortal sin (I mean, the stedfast Abjuration of true matter of Fact) this is a Presumption of that Force and Contradiction to the Genius of Christianity, and so contrary to the very Essentials and Fundamentals of Humane Nature, that I know not what to resolve it into, but a total dereliction of God Almighty, or some latent

Frenzy

Frenzy in thoſe wretched Delinquents.

I have indeed heard ſome Learned Men urge the ſtrong force of Education and Inſtitution, as a competent cauſe to rivet this Principle into the perſwaſions of the Romiſh Agents: What e're it is, it affords matter of myſterious difficulty to me; and what Principle ſoever it owns, certainly the reſolute Effects it produces, muſt needs belong to a very forcible Cauſe, ſince we ſee this firm Obſtinacy retains its Vigour in Attempts of the laſt danger, and at the dreadful point of unavoidable Death too.

'Tis true, that the Biſhop and Spiritual Senate of Rome exhibit all the Machiavilian Maximes, (which they without exception call in to eſtabliſh and advance their Secular and Eccleſiaſtick Politie) under the ſpecious ſtamp of Divine Authority, and crown the moſt horrid Enterprizes and unnatural Villanies with the additional advantage of Merit; this (if firmly believed, believed, but there lies the difficulty) must needs infuse as much Courage and Resolution, as the Arabian Elysium did into the Primitive Assassins, or Mahomet's Paradise doth into the Ottoman Souldiers. For Superstition of this kinde deeply grafted, hath always proved the strongest spring and most vigorous motive of desperate deeds and devices: Besides, the indisputable Obedience that the Jesuitick Order is sworn into to their respective Superiour, is of no ordinary force and influence to these Exploits, and of grand import to the purposes of the Roman Conclave.

And this suggests how furiously in opposition to this extreme of blinde compliance, some of our present Fanaticks run into the other contrary, and flatly deny that there is any Ecclesiastick Superiority at all; others affirm that the Episcopal Function is at best distinct, not in Degree and Fact, but in Title and Dignity only, to that of Presbyter; contrary trary to the plain uſage of the Catholick Church, and the practice of Antiquity in all Ages. And with theſe men forſooth ἐπίσκοπος is no more of Divine Right, than the little Office of Overſeer (its nameſake) in ſome of our Parochial Societies.

The redreſs of this, as of other crazy Opinions of our modern Sectaries, is apparently Eccentrick to the power and force of Argument; the proper Remedy and effectual Cure belonging moſt certainly to a ſmarter Application, than that of ſoft and gentle Reaſonings.

And now 'tis high time to tell you, how that by theſe brief occaſional remarks on the corruptions of Chriſtianity from the Ambition and Avarice of ſome Profeſſors, from Enthuſiaſtick whimſies, from the ſenceleſs Subtleties of the Schoolmen and Caſuiſts, from ſome cramp words and forc'd Alluſions out of Ariſtotle, from the Romiſh Impoſtures, and Phanatick Hypocriſie, I have at leaſt hit my deſigne in the Negative, by which

which you may gueſs of what Religion I am not of.

Truely, I am heartily ſorry that the true Tree of Life, Chriſtianity, ſhould be branched out into ſo many Diviſions, and that our grand Enemy hath not only ſowed tares in our field, but inſerted ſpurious graffs here too: however, my firm and faithful dependence is on that Branch which hath an undeniable riſe and growth from the old Catholick and Apoſtolick ſtock, and from whence (Zacheus-like)

Luke 19.4,5. I have a Call (I hope) as well as a full and perfect View of my bleſſed Saviour, from amongſt the vulgar crowd of Schiſms and Hereſies: In a word, I am not ſo much of Education, much leſs of Intereſt or Coaction, as of free, yet firm and rational choice, a Member of the Church of England, as now by Law eſtabliſht.

And yet Education, by an Epidemick Calamity, hath in all Countreys and Ages been the beſt Title perhaps, that the Bulk of Mankinde could plead to their their Religion: That 'tis ſo now amongſt the grand Monde of Mahometans, Jews and Pagans, is I think not to be diſputed. And indeed the difficulties are ſo great, and the methods ſo nice of diſengaging natural Reaſon from the ſtrong entanglements of Prejudice, Education, and National Intereſt, that I think it to be almoſt morally impoſſible (all circumſtances weighed) for theſe Infidels to raiſe and refine their groſs Apprehenſions to a due and ſober Scrutiny of Chriſtian Truths:

Truths: And therefore to talk to them of the Trinity, Incarnation, Crucifixion, Resurrection, and the like other Mysteries of our Religion, would but produce the same incredulous wonder, as to repeat and plead for some Fables in the Metamorphosis.

For if the ripe reason of learned Nicodemus (in the very midst of Miracles) could at best but arrive to a doubtful Question, Joh. 3. 9. How can these things be? puzzled (as appears) by the one only Doctrine

Doctrine of Regeneration; if he could hardly reliſh theſe Living Waters at the Fountain-head, well may the Streams run muddy through our ſhallow conveyances, and prove inſipid, if not nauſeous and ridiculous to theſe ſenceleſs, ſtupid mortals.

What ſhall we judge then of the groſs and maſs of mankinde, who lye under prejudice or Ignorance invincible? What diſtinct Regions of Immortality can we aſſigne to many millions of the ſo long unundiſcovered Americans? Amongſt whom were found not only the common Rules, but ſtrict obſervances too of Juſtice, Veracity and Sobriety?

Mountaign

In what claſſis and degree of Felicity or Miſery can we range the good old Heathens Socrates, Seneca, &c. who living up to the height of their Principles (as ſome think, thô I have good reaſon to doubt it) were a Law unto themſelves. There is no other name given among men, whereby whereby we must be saved, saith the Apostle, but the Name of Jesus, Act. 4.12. What, shall we fondly feign a middle state, a Limbus Philosophorum? For 'tis uncharitable to conclude absolutely and cruelly, that the Merciful Good God will destroy the work of his own Hands.

Perhaps the most rational refuge in this case, is to presume, that our gracious Father by ways best known to himself, might impart (if not a Revelation, yet) an Application of

of the Name and Merits of the holy Jesus to these just and sober Moralists, if they were indeed really so.

But as to my unspeakable Peace and Comfort I am a Christian of the Church of England; so to my inestimable honour and glory, I am a Priest of the most High God, and received my Authority and Commission from my Lord and Master Jesus, rightly and truely, by the hands of Episcopacy and the Presbytery.

And as I then felt no unusual unuſual Impulſes of an extraordinary Spirit, no new Light or Revelation, nor any other Enthuſiaſtick Emotions of an over-heated Imagination: ſo neither did I rudely and raſhly intrude without Call, amongſt my Maſters hired Labourers: For I had a fair Invitation from Gods ordinary Goodneſs and Providence to work in his Vineyard, and I found in my ſelf an honeſt Reſolution and hearty Inclination ſo to do; which truely I lookt upon as a ſufficient warrant and juſtification for

for my Affirmative Answer to that first Ordination-Question, Do you think in your heart that you be truely called, &c. to the Order and Ministry of Priesthood?

And now as I verily believe this divine Character to be indelible, so I esteem of it as the most noble stamp and Impress humane Nature is capable of, whilst cloathed with clay. I am not so much surprized as troubled, to see the common derision and contempt that attends the Clergy: For those Scorners

Scorners that cavil at the very Faith, and queſtion the Doctrine itſelf, cannot reaſonably be expected to regard and reverence the Diſpenſers. And ſince this Town and Kingdome is infeſted with ſuch ſwarms of Deiſts, Socinians, Atheiſts, and others, that not only violate the undoubted Regalia, but with treaſonable Blaſphemy diſpute the Divine Sovereignty of Jeſus; how ſhould they not affront and outrage the Ambaſſadours of Chriſt? We are, I fear, making fair

Advances,

Advances, and by very ſenſible degrees too, to that diſmal ſtate of Infidelity, the proſpect of which made our Saviour exclaim long ago, When the Son of Man cometh, ſhall he finde Faith upon Earth? Luk. 18. 8.

And yet I have obſerved, that our Adverſaries raiſe much of their pertneſs and audacity to deſpiſe and abuſe us, from a certain ſheepiſh dejection of ſpirit that poſſeſſes many: Thus we our ſelves, by a baſe and daſtardly Cowardiſe, antedate our own own contempt, and poorly fancying our ſelves always liable and open to affront, like ſuſpicious eaſie Slaves, we (by this means) become of our Enemies party, and invite and anticipate the approaching Deſpight, by letting our Countenances fall, and ſeeming little in our own Eyes: This is exactly to make a gap for every inſolent pragmatical Aſs to tread over. Inſtances of this kinde I have not ſeldom ſeen in ſome mean-ſpirited, poor Divines, whoſe little Souls ebbe and flow with the changes

ges of Fortune, and who want a true ſenſe of the Excellency and Noble worth of their high Calling, ſervilely valuing themſelves by the falſe meaſures of this ſilly, unreaſonable, degenerate Age. I finde that a man in this caſe hath juſt as much reſpect as he gives himſelf; and a manly Confidence and well-bred Aſſurance here, is not at all inconſiſtent with Chriſtian Meekneſs and Humility. But alas! We have too many creep into the Prieſthood, and ſteal into the

the Sanctum Sanctorum of the Christian Tabernacle, young and raw, hardly yet Masters of common Philosophy, but in fruitless Theory; nor are they arrived to the proficiency of the poor Stoicks, in opposing a stedfast Courage and Equality of Soul to the rude shock of Contempt and Poverty: How then shall they retain Breath and Patience sufficient to run through those several rugged stages of Self-denial and Mortification, which the proud and insolent dealing of this world requires, and the Doctrine of Jesus proposes? Contempt, Poverty, and Death, (that dreadful Triumvirate of mundane Terrours) which the courageous Reason of the old Philosophers cou'd baffle, is too hard for the Reason and Faith too of many fresh-water Souldiers in our Church-Militant.

'Tis possible, 'tis true, for a wise man by a steady course of manly conduct to escape Contempt; but the approaches of Poverty are often unavoidable, and the rude-

neſs of its attendants almoſt inſufferable. This ſtate and condition (eſpecially if ſucceſſive to late Wealth and Honour) is the beſt Teſt and Touchſtone of true worth and Magnanimity:

Hic animus opus, hic pectore firmo. Virg. Æneid. l. 6.

'Tis an eaſie matter, when full of Riches and Honour, to fancy we have all Vertues; and the fawning world ſhall avouch it too.

— Omnis enim res
Divitiis parent, quas, qui conſtruxerit, ille

Clarus erit, fortis, juſtus, ſapiens, &c. Horat. ſerm. lib. 2. Satyr. 3.

Yet I fear, not one of five hundred that rowls in wealth and affluence, hath well Conned the hard Leſſon which the honeſt Stoicks taught in their ἀπέχε. But granting we have arrived to ſome proficiency in the Abſtinential Vertues, we muſt not therefore conclude our ſelves truely approved, till we have tried our Strength and Patience to the quick in the ſharp exerciſes of Vertues other branch, branch, the Tolerantial part, the ἀνέχου also: or, till with St. Paul we can truely say, I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need, Philip. 4. 12.

With what Assuming Gravity and Magisterial Awe have I heard rich and great men censure and expose small miscarriages and weaknesses in poor and mean Persons; when at that very time, the Reprover himself hath been guilty of the same Crime, and greater too, with ſome little Alteration of the guiſe only; nay, and the advantage ſhall be ſo dexterouſly managed on his ſide, as to make it Vertue and accompliſhment.

Vos ô Trojugenæ vobis ignoſcitis, & quæ Turpia Cerdoni Voleſos, Brutóſque decebunt. Juven. Sat. 8.

And thus the rich and honourable have not only all Vertues (of courſe) in the Vogue of the world; but they fancie themſelves very devout and religious too;

too; at leaſt if their odde kinde of Faith can make them ſo; for they pray moſt commomly without doubting, eſpecially when they ſay, Give us this day our daily bread, (knowing their Barns to be full;) and forgive us, &c. as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us, when they finde that no man dares affront them.

But to harbour no anxious ſollicitude for the morrow, nor in extreme and helpleſs Poverty to entertain any peeviſh diſtruſt of Divine Providence, but to have a chearful Faith and reliance on my Heavenly Father, this is Religion: And freely and frequently to forgive my Lives aggreſſour, or the malicious diſturber of my peace, without any the leaſt reſerve of Revenge or Rancour, this is Chriſtianity. Mat. 6.

I have been too much intimate (in vain youth) with the moſt familiar Pleaſures of humane Nature; and yet by ſudden and frequent Intermixtures, as well acquainted with

with the Troubles and Croſſes of this fickle and unconſtant world: But, I thank my God, when Fortune hath made the moſt Vexatious Doubles, ſhe could never run me to a loſs; nor hath ſhe made one wrinckle of Sorrow or Fear the more in my face, when ſhe hath turned her own into a thouſand frightful Grimaces. I declare ingenuouſly, that my Soul hath ever kept a ſteady Poiſe, (if not enclin'd to the impatience of Proſperity) and the moſt ſtunning

Accidents never benum'd my presence of minde so far, but that I have perfectly reassured my self, softned the most piquant Passion, and smoothed the roughest disorder of thought, by an hours Retreat and Meditation, saying with old Eli, It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good, 1 Sam. 3.18. Or to the same purpose with the wise Stoick, Ἄγε δή με ὦ Ζεῦ, ὁποῖ ποτή σοι εἰμὶ διατεταγμένος, Epict.

To end all this, in my very worst Calamities, I always concluded, that there there was need of the greateſt Courage; for then to deſpond, is to be on my Enemies ſide, and by my faint reſiſtance to double the force of the Aſſault: but to deſpair is Frenſie, and poorly to yield the ſtakes, before the Game is up. For what an extreme Madneſs is it to be frighted with the advantages on the contrary ſide, ſuppoſing ten thouſand to one againſt me? Why (pray) may not that one ſtill happen? No man is undone, till he thinks himſelf ſo. Ita eſt vita ho- minum quasi cum ludas tesseris, si id quod maximè opus est jactu non cadit, id quod cecidit fortè, arte ut corrigas. Terent.

There is no doubt, but the chiefeſt, if not only deſigne of our Prieſtly Miniſtry, is that which our bleſſed Saviour by moſt paſſionate inculcations urged to Peter, Joh. 21. 17. To feed God's ſheep. And to this end, the frequency of the Word, and Sacramental Duties, of Prayer alſo, often publick, without ceaſing private, is of indiſpenſable Neceſſity: 'Tis

'Tis we more eſpecially, that are to make Prayers and Supplications for all men, for Kings, and for thoſe who are in Authority: 'Tis we that muſt make Interceſſion for the People, when God's Judgments are abroad; 'tis we that muſt with Faith and Courage ſtand in the gap, when Wrath is gone out from the Lord, and the Plague is begun, Numb. 16. 48. 'Tis we that muſt be always ready to give a reaſonable account of our Hope, and with undaun- 1 Ti. 2. 2

ted arguings urge the Doctrine and Faith of Christ (to some now a days a Stumbling-block, to others Foolishness, 1 Pet. 3. 15.) against the growing oppositions of Atheism, Heresie and Prophaneness. 'Tis we that must Preach plain, practical Truths to the people, with the Rules and Fundamental Reasons of Obedience, Justice, Sobriety, Charity; and all this in easie and familiar (yet powerful) Applications; not in Rhetorical Harangue, or Affectation of Speech and Gesture, which

which doth but make the ignorant gape, and tickles the Ears of the more knowing; producing perhaps a plausible perswasion in the one, but scarce true Christian Edification in either; and better becomes the old Roman Rostrum, than the Christian Pulpit.

And since the unreasonable Prejudice of people seems now adays to make it almost necessary, we should endeavour to obtain the Custom and Habit of talking to them in a familiar way of converse

as it were, (ſalvâ majeſtate verbi) and (if it may be) wholly without Book.

'Tis true, that when the Preachers Eyes and Geſtures are pointed directly to the Auditory, they are the more likely to give their regards and attentions to him: but again, 'tis ſtrange to me, that theſe ſilly Souls ſhould fancy, that the effects of a nimble Invention and unſteady curſory Effuſion to be more the Word of God, than the beſt of a mans ſober thoughts ſquared exactly by the Holy Scripture,

Scripture, in Methodick Writing. Matters of Controverſie we ought wholly to decline; for, (beſides that 'tis eaſie to prate where there is none to oppoſe) the people would be kept more obedient and ſafe, if they could altogether be kept ignorant that there is any oppoſition in any kinde to the truth of our Doctrines: beſides, what neceſſity is there of telling them (to their dangerous amuſement) what is wrong, as long as we continue them in the right Belief and Practice practice of what we know to be true and right?

But now I better think on't, since our Schismatical Dissenters Compass Sea and Land to make one Proselyte, Mat. 23.15. and indefatigably take all opportunities by partial and detracting misrepresentations to tell their own Tale first, to our no small disadvantage; it might be perhaps of some good consequence, if our Loyally-affected Ministers would take frequent Occasions (not in their publick Pulpits, but) in their ordiordinary familiar Communications with their Parishioners, to explain and enlarge upon such Points of Publick Duty, and sound Belief, as these few following; that the good People might be disabused from the insinuating Cheats and Impostures of these deal-board Mountebanks, and disswaded from giving their Money for that which is not Bread, Isai. 55. 2.

I. That the Power and Authority of Kings, is from God.

II. That Prerogative is ac-accountable to none but God, Psal. 51. 4. But Property and Priviledge in many cases forfeitable to the Crown.

III. That to Depose Kings for fear of Arbitrary Government, is as unjust as to suppose a man feloniously-affected, and so hang him afore-hand, lest he should Steal or Murder.

IV. That to draw Arguments from Precedents, and conclude de facto ad jus, is as unjust a proceeding in Politicks, as 'tis often in Law.

V. That

V. That to fear Arbitrary Government, or its Tyrannical Effects, in a King of Great Britain, is to suppose a Moral Impossibility.

VI. That the Kingly Government of these Realms, as 'tis contemper'd with the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, is the happiest Policy in the world.

VII. That Major singulis, minor universis, is bad Logick and worse Divinity, 2 Sam. 18. 3.

VIII. That 'tis unlawful upon any pretence what-whatsoever, for the Subject to take up Arms against the King.

IX. That Rebellious Innovations always end in Confusion and Anarchy; and redress of Grievances that way, hath proved worse than the Disease.

X. That the Church of England (as now by Law establish'd) retains the true Catholick and Apostolick Faith.

XI. That out Gracious Sovereign is in all Causes Ecclesiastical (as well as Temporal) Supreme Governour.

XII.

XII. That a Subjects wiſeſt and ſureſt way is to adhere to the Eſtabliſh'd Religion (in theſe Kingdoms) without the leaſt Cavil or Diſpute, if he believes he may be ſaved therein.

XIII. That no pretence of ſcruple whatſoever, without plain proofs and demonſtration, can excuſe any Subject from the poſitive Commands to abſolute Obedience in all things Lawful or Indifferent.

XIV. That Separate Meetings, and Fanatical Conven-

Conventicles, have been known lurking-holes and refuges of Romiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits, and (of conſequence) Nurſeries of Actors upon the Stage of Rebellion.

XV. That, upon an exact review, we have great reaſon to conclude our preſent diviſions to belong to a Principle very different from that of Scruple and Tenderneſs.

XVI. That Ambition and Avarice are the two great Wheels of the Devils Chariot.

XVII. That when our

our grand Adversary designs most Mischief, he always hangs out the white Flag of Religion.

XVIII. That Liberty of Conscience commonly proves Licence to be Seditious.

XIX. That our Dissenting Zealots who plead for it most, have been observed to grant it least.

XX. That the People of this Nation are acquainted with much more than they should know, and much less than they should practise.

XXI. That we can never have peaceable days, as long as Bulkers and Coblers are Preachers and Couranters.

XXII. That Vox Populi is not always Vox Dei, Mat. 27. 22.

XXIII. That the Stool of Repentance and illegal Impositions of Oaths on King and People, is a greater piece of Arbitrary Tyranny, than French Monarchy, or Kissing of the Pope's Toe.

XXIV. That the Kingly Government of this Nation is equally inconsistent siſtent with Popery and Preſbytery.

XXV. That the Power and Riches of the King is the Peace and Proſperity of the People.

XXVI. That 'tis impoſſible for Peace and Godlineſs to continue long in Church or State, under a general Toleration of Schiſmatical and Factious Opinions in matters of Religion, Mat. 12. 25.

Theſe ſhort Aphoriſms I preſume to infert by way of Eſſay only, and as imperfect Hints of what wiſer Heads and abler Judgments may do in ſtronger and more ſuitable Applications to the good People of this diſtracted Kingdome.

But before I wholly leave this point, it may be worth while to obſerve, by what an ignorant, ſilly Miſtake, the dull Teachers in our Separate Aſſemblies conclude of the Power and Prevalency of their Doctrine, from the ſullen cloudineſs of Countenance, and tumultuous diſorder it cauſes in the Paſſions of their Female Auditory, Anditory, rather than from any Serenity and clearneſs of Minde and Underſtanding: For I have very good grounds to believe, that all this noiſe hath left the Intellect untoucht, and that it hath not in any degree reacht the Seat of their Reaſon and Judgment. And thus ſuch Artiſts as can beſt by tender Expreſſions, and paſſionate Applications, ſoften, mellow and diſſolve the looſe and eaſie Paſſions of ſilly Women, are (forſooth) the only able, powerful men, and they

(good Souls!) can Edifie under none but them: When alas, all this seeming effectual Operation, is no better than just thus; viz. the whining Holderforth and the Female Congregation being at that time tuned (like two Viols) exactly alike by the Magick of Enthusiastick Sympathy, their Notes correspond of course, and the Canting of the one immediately begets Sighs and Groans in the other.

I am of opinion, that the highest Paroxysms of Vulgar Quakerisme have much much the ſame Cauſe, as Dancing to Muſick in Fits of the Tarantula: For I have with pity and pleaſure both obſerv'd, that the malignant Ferment hath been by degrees exhaled by their violent Sudorifick motions; and when the poor Soul hath ſpent his Spirits, and is tyred at his very heart, then (as he fancies) the Spirit goes off and leaves working. And I am inclined too to think, that the cooler habits of this Religious diſeaſe in many of them are to be cured by Medicinal Drugs, and a regular courſe of Pill, Potion and Phlebotomy.

A timely Viſitation of the Sick, as 'tis a charitable duty almoſt neceſſary, ſo it belongs as properly to the Function of a Prieſt, as to the Profeſſion of a Phyſician; and the careful Viſits of a Ghoſtly Father ſhould (of right) be more welcome and comfortable, and accounted of higher import, as the care of our Souls ought to be of dearer concern to us than that of our frail Bodies: and yet with us, us, Ubi desinit Medicus, ibi incipit Theologus, is a common woful practice. For my own part, I should think my self obliged by a timelier Assistance to minde my ghostly Patient of the dangers of his long Journey, urge him to hearty Confession, give him comfortable Absolution, and Communicate to him the strengthening Viaticum of the Body and Blood of the Adorable Jesus. How busie the restless malice of the Enemy of Mankinde may be at this time to insinuate Suggestions of De-ſpair, or preſumptuous hopes of longer Life, into Sick perſons, I know not; but ſurely I am bound to examine the caſe, and by ſeaſonable Anticipations prevent (at leaſt) the ſucceſs of Satan's devices.

That the Devil by Injection can modifie our Thoughts, and in a great meaſure rule the Faculties, (eſpecially of weak ſick perſons, who are now more retired within themſelves, and free from the ſenſible amuſements and diverſions of worldly objects) I verily believe; for he

he may make a very malicious and mischievous use of the advantages he hath over our Souls (himself being a subtle, powerful Spirit,) and (therefore) by eminency of like nature, may have a very forcible Influence upon the Operations of our Spirit; as (to take a parallel Analogy from what appears in matter, the contrary essence) the Pressure or Collision of a stronger body alters (we see) the Figure of Extension in a weaker; or as the dimension of soft Wax is (by my my hands) now ſquare, then round, and preſently triangular or oblong.

Now the Advantages of theſe frequent Viſits will not only be ſo to the Sick, but will produce in us forcible habits of undaunted Indifferencie againſt the Fears and Apprehenſions of Death in general, and the nearer Approaches of it too, when our ſelves are aſſaulted. Our moſt proper Titles are Ghoſtly, Spiritual, and ſuch-like; to intimate, that 'tis our Trade to be familiarly preſent and frequently aſſiſtant at Nature's ture's grand Diſſection of Soul and Body: It will the better improve our Theologick Knowledge and Skill, as an accurate diligence in Anatomick Exerciſes doth that of the Chirurgick; beſides that the company of a Divine Phyſician ſuits well with the Soul, as ſhe is ready to be diſmantled of her walls of fleſh, and tranſmitted to the better Colony of the new Jeruſalem.

To men of our Function, the ſight of Death ſhould be no more terrible than than that of our Breath; and we may be ashamed, that our profest hopes of the Bodies Resurrection, and the immediate Felicity of our Soul, falls short of the courageous Gallantry of many Heathens, in braving the ghastly King of Terrours to his very face, upon no better or very little more assurance of Immortality, than that of surviving Fame and Glory, or a fruitless Nomen erit indelebile nostrum.

I have known some of us, that not want of Christian Charity, but Courage (in this this point)hath with-held from paying their laſt dutiful Offices to Sick perſons; and when a ſilly common Nurſe ſhall attend alone in ſilent, diſmal Night-watches, theſe men could not approach in open day, without apparent damps of Conſternation. And yet 'tis (doubtleſs) as natural to die as to live, or as 'tis to be born: and the ſight of a Coffin alters me no more than that of a Cradle. Certainly, if the ſtrange appearance of the object ſtartled us, a ſilly Midwife hath hath greater reaſon to be ſcared at the odde and uncouth Circumſtances that accompany Natures thruſting a Child into the world, than we in duely preparing a departing man or woman for the familiar Womb of our common Mother.

I finde little more ſurprize or alteration in my ſelf at the ſight of a deceaſed Man, than of any other dead Animal: Nay, why ſhould I not (on the contrary) be much more amazed at this, than that? Since this is an abſolute object of irreparable Mortality, and a total Privation appears here; in the other, of one Moiety only, and that but to the general Resurrection.

'Tis Opinion, not Reason or Religion, rules men. Dying hath been the common trade and way of all flesh, for almost Six thousand years; and more dye by Weekly Computation than are born: Nay, this Champion hath made one single Field such a glorious Scene of his Pomp and Luxury, that 500000 Spectacles of Mortality have have been at once offered as Victims to the insatiate Fury of one bloudy Battle, 2 Chron. 13.17. And in such a small Circumscription of time and place as this, I suppose we never heard, nor ever shall, of an equal number of Nativities.

To me to dye is gain, saith St. Paul, Phil. 1. 21. which besides an Enfranchisement and release from the many troubles of this Life, and the acquisition of eternal Joy, doth also import to me, That by Death and Separation this

Concrete

Concrete becomes two distinct Essences; and we are so far from vanishing into nothing, that by the advantageous division of Soul and Body, one single Being branches into a duplicity of Existences. For our Corps, thô silent and unactive in the cold Lap of common Fate, looses not a whit of its title to Existence; nay, even in this ghastly Privation, there still appear some weak remains and faint efforts of a Vegetative Soul.

But our Spirit shall mount up like an Eagle, Isai.

Isai. 40. 31. on the wings of celestial activity, and greedily grasp all the pleasures of a perfect Intelligence, ranging at large in the infinite Abyss of immortal Light & boundless Aboads of Angels. There she will clearly discern the nature of her own Essence and Faculties by reflex Intuition on her self; or else (perhaps) see the perfect Image of her self, and of all things past, present and to come (to her infinite satisfaction) in the glorious Mirrour of the Eternal Godhead. Nor will will ſhe then owe her knowledge to the groſs Communications of material objects, through the weak conveyances of bodily ſenſe.

I could (in ſome fits of contemplative Melancholy) fall aſleep aſſoon in a Charnel-houſe, as in my Bed-chamber; and am often ſo weary of dull Life, that my greateſt delight is in ſuch objects as ſpeak moſt to its diſadvantage. The ſtate and magnificence of a Tomb or Monument, ſteals a ſecret wiſh from me to be Tenant to that quiet quiet, ſilent Pomp, more than the ſight of a ſumptuous Palace, to be Lord and Maſter there.

I know that I carry a Ghoſt always about me, and that I my ſelf am a walking Spirit: This thought allays in me thoſe vulgar fears of the haunts and viſits of Spectres. And as I am not at all afraid of my ſelf (unleſs, when God lets looſe his terrours upon my Soul, and my Conſcience laſhes me for my ſins, Job 18. 11.) ſo I am very little apprehenſive of Apparitions: Nay more,

I

I could wish the Communications more frequent betwixt us and the Inhabitants of the upper world: It would harden our Christian Courage, familiarize to us the thoughts of Separation; and create in us a passionate Love of that Country, from the good report of these spiritual Spies, making us say with courageous Caleb, Let us go up and possess it, Numb. 13. 30.

I could (I thank God) stare a reputed Witch full in the face, with as little little terrour as I look upon a ſucking Infant ; and boldly retort the poyſonous emiſſions of her malicious Eyes. For in this I take Balaam at his word (who without doubt had tried the Experiment)that there is no Enchantment againſt Jacob , neither is there any Divination againſt Iſrael , Numb. 23. 23.

I pretend not by the Title of this ſmall Treatiſe to any extraordinary Scheme or new draught of Religion for the Clergy, much leſs would I be thought thought ſlily to ſuggeſt any neglect or deficiency of theirs in the practice of the Old: I am very very well aſſured, that Religio Clerici is a direct Tautologie; and yet I detract no more from the Sanctimonious Worth of the Clergy, by the conjunction of theſe two terms, than I deny the Sun to be the Fountain of Light, when I ſay, Lumen Solis. Only I could wiſh that we were all, not only good and vertuous, but eminently and in the laſt degree ſo too; and that all the leſſer Chriſtian Luminaries might more and more derive Light from us. I would have all the Wiſdome and Vertue that ever appeared in the guiſe of true Reaſon in the world, ſumm'd up and amaſſed in a Chriſtian Prieſt; eſpecially in a daily, ſincere contempt of this world. We ſhould ſtrive clearly to demonſtrate the certain hope we have of Eternal Felicity after Death, by being very careleſs, if at all ſenſible of this Life. And in this this let us ſoar a pitch beyond the higheſt flights of the wiſeſt Heathens, and outdo in very fact their utmoſt Ideas and Hyperboles.

The excellent Speculations of ſome old Philoſophers aroſe ('tis true) to a very great height, and their refined Reaſon was exerciſed in moſt divine Contemplations: But alas! the better and purer their Notions were of Vertue and Sanctity, they became ſo much the more impracticable to them, and they fell ſhort in the performance of their own Rules and Dictates. The Cauſe of this natural inability and latent impotency of their Wills, they were altogether ſtrangers to; and thô they knew in effect moſt Doctrines of Chriſtian Morality, yet having not the Faith of Jeſus, nor by conſequence the aſſiſtance of God's particular Grace, their knowledge was but of ſmall import and ſignificancy; nor could it in the very beſt of them produce actions acceptable to God, unleſs his

fecret infinite Mercy gave ſome gracious allowances for that natural corruption which they knew nothing of, and which was cured but in a poor degree by univerſal Grace.

And this Notion I have framed to my ſelf of the Heathens Morality, enclines me to believe, that our Wills derived from Adam's diſobedience, a depravity double to that of our Intellects; for as we ſee by theſe Pagans, their Underſtanding could excellently diſtinguiſh, and were (in the Serpent's words) as Gods knowing good and evil, yet were the Imaginations of the thoughts of their hearts always evil continually, Gen. 6. 5. But we Christian Prieſts, that have ſucceſſively received all the gradual Communications of Divine Grace, and Sanctifications of the bleſſed Spirit, from the Font to the Miniſtry of the holy Altar, are doubly obliged, as we tranſcend the beſt of them in the ſublime Myſteries of our Faith, ſo to outſtrip them in the moſt excellent practices ctices of Evangelical Morality; and not them only, but all others also.

Non possumus perficere bonam actionem sine adjutorio Gratiæ, is rightly opposed to Pelagius; nor is the proposition only notional: for besides that our Saviour tells us, without me ye can do nothing, Joh. 15.5. And St. Paul, that 'tis God which worketh in us, both to will and do, Philip. 2. 13. I have often observed, (in my own narrow œconomy) that the cleareſt Convictions of Reaſon, and ſtrongeſt Moral Reſolutions, have proved weak and of ſmall force againſt the power of moſt ſins; eſpecially againſt the violent aſſaults of a complexional Vice: We may ſin and reſolve to the contrary, and reſolve and ſin again in infinitum, till with Jacob we wraſtle with God, (Gen.32.26.) as well as reſiſt the Devil; until by violent Prayer we take Heaven by force, (Matth.11.12.) and draw down the aſſiſtance of Divine Grace, all our other ſtrongeſt and moſt vigorous Efforts will prove ſeeble and ineffectual. The very Experience of this hath confuted Pelagianiſme to me, better than a thouſand Syllogiſms.

I have ſeldome gone to Bed(in the days of looſeſt Vanity, and before I was ſo happy as ſincerely to eſpouſe the Predicate, much leſs had the honour to wear the ſubject of this Books title) without Pythagoras his Πῦ παρέβην, τί δ' ἐρέξα, &c. Aur. Carm. My reaſon hath upon an impartial ſumming up that days Evidence made my own Conſcience a ſevere Jury againſt me, in pronouncing a perfect diſlike and condemnation of ſuch proceedings: I have then made applications of (as I thought) ſtrong reſolves to obſerve its dictates for the future; and this hath in ſome meaſure aſſwaged the ſmart of my minde then. But alas! my trial all this while being at the wrong Bar, I could never obtain a true Pardon for old, nor ſtrength againſt new Lapſes: My Inclinations nations to ſin have doubled upon me; and when they felt the Curb of Reaſon pinch them, they began to be reſty; or as if a plain diſcovery had more and more hardned their countenances, the Senſualities which they privately ſtole before, they began now to act with remorſeleſs Effronterie; nay more, they would mutter Arguments for their Juſtification alſo: This indeed alarm'd me to the quick; I examin'd my ſelf immediately by the ſtandard of the San-

Etuary; fell proſtrate at the Throne of Grace, and obtained Balm from Gilead to cure the Wounds of my repeated weakneſſes. And (by this new method) I felt more ſtrength in a ſhort time from a ſingle, but hearty Prayer, Lead me not into temptation, but deliver me from evil, than from all the cleareſt and niceſt reaſons and perſwaſions of the Peripatum, or Porticus.

Not but that theſe Ethicks, together with a rational and impartial

ſurvey of ourſelves, may produce ſtronger and better effects in others than they did in me; but we muſt not rely on the guidance and conviction of theſe alone to amend us; leſt we make no better advances than mere Ethnicks, by the force of Free-will, and conduct of humane Reaſon: Common Moralities belonging not (perhaps) to the ſame ſpecies with Evangelical Graces, but differing from them as much in eſſential Beauty, as theſe do from the perfection of Angelical lical Obedience. For (I say once more) my Opinion is, that our Wills received a deeper tincture of corruption, and a far larger Dose of Depravity from Adam's Fall, than the Intellectual Faculty; foraſmuch as we finde the former ſtrongly averſe to obſerve and practiſe thoſe Doctrines, which the Religion of Jeſus teaches, and which ſome Heathens had a rough draught of from Natural Reaſon, I mean the Theorems of Morality, and that in no mean meaſure neither: for ex-excepting ſuch revealed Myſteries as have a peculiar relation to the incomprehenſible Theanthropy, What ſublime Doctrine of Chriſtian Philoſophy have they not hinted? Even ſo far, as to the forgiving and loving their Enemies. But yet, I cannot believe that their actions were in a ſuitable degree correſpondent to their Principles, nor did their practices make advances equal to their Speculations and Theorick Knowledge. Why ſhould any man therefore vainly rely upon that pretended mighty thing, the natural ſtrength of Free-Will? Let us Chriſtians rather exclaim, Non nobis, Domine, non nobis, &c.

If it were poſſible to encline me to the Predeſtinarian Opinion, the urging the ninth Chapter to the Romans would not work half ſo much upon me, as our Lord and Saviour's Anſwer to that Queſtion, Lord, are there few that are ſaved? Strive (ſaith he, Luke, 13. 24.) to enter in at the ſtrait gate, for many (I ſay ſay unto you) will ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able.

And truly when I conſider the little ſence and knowledge which moſt Chriſtians (to omit by ten times the greater part of mankinde) have of the Divine Life, how deeply the generality is immerſed in the prejudices of Nature, clouded with dull groſneſs of Intellect, and inapprehenſive Ignorance of the true ſtate of Nature, and the Methods and Conditions of their Redemption; Slaves to Vices

Vices of Conſtitution or Habit, diverted by neceſſary cares and worldly buſineſs, intangled in (almoſt) unavoidable Injuſtices of Commerce and Traffique, and wholly taken up with affairs of Natural or Political Life; in a word, led captive to ſin, by the Luſts of the Fleſh, the luſts of the Eye, and Pride of Life, 1 Joh. 2. 16. When too, I obſerve the natural averſneſs of our Wills, the many exact circumſtances required to compleat a good action, Bonum ex integrâ

integrâ cauſâ, malum ex quolibet defectu: When I regard the way almoſt of all Fleſh ſince Adam, how ſenceleſs and careleſs of celeſtial buſineſs; but above all, when I think on the moſt incredible obſtinacy (had not God ſaid it) and prodigious perverſneſs of the antient Jews, under the palpable ſenſe and ocular Convictions of Miracles and Judgments: When I read Adam ſtumbled and fell amidſt all the Rays of Divinity in Paradiſe; that Peter with cowardly

Per-

Perjury could deny his Maſter (Mat. 26. 74.) the known Son of God, contrary to fair warning given him by his Lord, and all his late bravadoes of Fidelity even to Death, Mat. 26. 34, 35. and more than all this, contrary to his great and glorious Confeſſion, Mat. 16. 16. That wiſe Solomon ſacrificed to the Devil, althô he had ſeen God twice, 1 King. 11. 8, 9. When, I ſay, I ſum up all this together, I wonder (with deep adoration of God's Mercy) that any one man is ſaved, and ſnatcht from amongſt the ſtrong Entanglements of the World, the Fleſh, and the Devil, whoſe indefatigable temptations, and ſly Devices to entrap us, I forgot to mention.

But again, when I ponder the methods of God's gracious dealing with us in the infallible Revelations of his Will in his holy Word; his paſſionate Expoſtulations, and kinde Invitations, by promiſes of Eternal Life and Felicity; his diſſwaſions from Sin, by dreadful Threats of of endleſs Miſery, all which in all other Caſes are the firſt and moſt forcible Motives of humane Actions: But above all, when I reflect upon the ſtupendious Myſtery of the Godhead's becoming Fleſh for our Redemption, the Ineffable Majeſty, grand import and ſignificancy, ſtrong and comfortable Efficacy, and the final End and Deſigne of that incomprehenſible piece of Mercy, together with the helps and comforts of the holy Sacraments, thoſe ſure Conveiances veiances of assisting Grace, the inward workings of the Holy Spirit, together with our own strong Convictions, and the Panacæa of all desperate repeated Falls and Apostasies, (God's gracious acceptance of true, though never so late) Repentance; considering (I say) all these, 'tis a Miracle to me, how any Rational Man should finally miscarry to damnation, much less that after all this, the surplusage of number should still lye on the side of the castaways. And I am more and more more plunged and puzled in this point, when I narrowly consider the Motives and Reasons of humane Actions, and the true nature of Free-will. The bare freedom of our Will hath certainly all reasons imaginable to ballance it on the side of Vertue and Piety; it is not only cured of its natural corruption by Grace, but the power of this Grace must be allowed to have the prevalency above the force of any temptation, Rom. 5. 20, 21. For 'tis derogatory to our Saviour's

Merits

Their Notion of Will who ſuppoſe it a Faculty diſtinct from the Intellect, I approve not of; and to call it a blinde Power, yet allow it liberty of Election, is beyond my underſtanding to apprehend. I rather underſtand the Will to be the laſt reſolution of the Intellectual Faculty, as it tends to action in exerting its power: So that I think Intellectus practicus may include Will too well enough; For what ever humane action proceeds from rational Volition, is supposed (more or less) to have passed the deliberation of our Understanding; that is, the very same power of a reasonable Soul (for I think not the Faculties distinct) first considers and judges, then determines it self to action.

Yet there are some humane Actions where violent surprize or the forcible sway of a constitutional Vice may hurry the Will

Will to ſudden choice, before the Intellect in that confuſion can appear at the Election; as in Fits of Cholerick or Luſtful Paſſions: But theſe ſeem to me actions of the Animal rather than the Man, and more properly ſpontaneous than free: And yet we have a few Inſtances of the Triumph of Grace over ſudden provoking Temptations even of this ſort, as in David's patient Meekneſs in the buſineſs of Shimei, 2 Sam. 16. 9, 10. when Abiſhai (thô not pointed at) was all on fire with bloudy rage and fury, as indeed it was his duty: And Joseph's resisting the importunate Sollicitations, and at last almost Ravishment of his Masters Wife in instanti, contrary to Flesh and Bloud, Interest and Ambition, that with joynt forces assaulted his Honour and Honesty all at once, as the case then stood. But to return, I suppose an humane Soul to be a Simple Thinking Essence, that judges and acts with rational deliberation, and which hath more more and ſtronger Motives ab intra and ab extra ſo to do, in matters of Chriſtian Duty, than in any other occaſions of Life whatſoever. By all this I mean, in a word, if there be greater Motives in Religion to incline this free thinking Soul of ours (according to her own common natural way of working) to good actions, than any other Principle can pretend to, to decline her to bad, (and which motives ſhe firmly believes and aſſents to) how can we in Reaſon, Religion, or Philoſophy ſolve the general Inclinations of Chriſtians in the groſs the other way, when the more forcible poize lies here; unleſs we make her freedom (like that of Fortune's) the moſt ſenceleſs indifferency imaginable; and that ſhe hath no regard or dependence on knowledg or perſwaſion, but lets her actions out looſe, and at rovers; which is Nonſence to me.

But farther ſtill, to chooſe a finite good before an Infinite, a temporal before an eternal, that is (in ſhort) a leſs before a greater; nay more, to chooſe in effect willingly her own deſtruction, for the ſake of a preſent Pleaſure or Intereſt, this is all to act quite contrary to all her other common Methods of proceeding in any other caſes whatſoever. To ſay ſhe could not abſolutely be free, unleſs ſhe could do thus, (i. e. act againſt the very Principles of her being, & thoſe of Self-preſervation) and that ſuch a bare indeterminate Power is the especial Prerogative of her freedome) is nothing but what I will grant; but yet still for all that, 'tis natural and rational to presume that this absolutely Free-will should rather, and most generally, in most Cases be directed (in Religion especially) by the dictates of clear Judgment, and convictions of Understanding: And since these in the business of Christianity bend (confessedly) to the side of Vertue and Goodness, Why are not the most of men (according to this ex-explanation of our Wills motion and operation) ballanced rather that way, than the other, as we see daily? If any one urge here the natural impotency in our Wills derived from Adam's corruption: I rejoyn (as before) that the Death of Christ and God's Grace doth abundantly poyze that Infirmity, nay more, helps our Will to advantage above that. But farther still, 'tis our nature to be rational; 'tis highly rational to be religious: what an excellent consequence doth now naturally follow? and yet (I fear) a thousand to one de facto miscarry: Little Flock, saith our Saviour, Luk. 12. 32. that startles me.

These Considerations, that the generality of Mankinde (Christians I mean) act according to their Capacities in the true discernment of the Colours of Good and Evil, in all (or most) cases but Religion, (which nevertheless is their greatest Interest, by confest plain Conviction) this, I say, general miscarriage of Free-will, together with our Saviour's our's aforesaid Answer to the Question, Luk. 13.24. inclines me to fear (till I am better informed) that few men are happy in the absolute use of unrestrain'd Freedome, but that in most there is a secret imperceptible clog upon humane Will in its tendencies and operations.

To sum up all, if our Will be free, and that freedom not simply blinde, but naturally (much more spiritually) directed by Understanding; and that Understanding informed by the confest Truths and ſtrong Convictions of Religion (tending to Self-preſervation Poſitive and Negative in the higheſt degree) and theſe again aſſiſted and inclinable to action by Divine Grace; and if there be a preſent Redreſs and effectual Remedy by Repentance for all poſſible Lapſes; How comes the generality of us to force Nature, Reaſon, Religion, Conviction, Demonſtration & Intereſt to act directly againſt their reſpective proper Principles? How is it that the true Iſraelites pitch like two little little flocks of Kids; but the Syrians fill the Countrey? 1 Kin. 20.27. How is it that the number of the Goats so far exceeds that of the Sheep? The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us, that we may do all the words of the Law, Deut. 29.29.

Such Contemplative Perplexities as these, do sometimes entertain my private thoughts, I confess, but I make no farther Consequences than what you have just now readr

no

nor do I harbour the leaſt ſurmiſe that touches the Juſtice of the moſt Juſt God, or deduce any Inference that may have a bad influence on my actions; nor do I follow the lewd humour of this Age in urging Neceſſity and Impoſſibility, as Compurgators for their habitual wicked practices. I conclude no Neceſſity, or irreverſible Decree abſolutely from theſe and ſuch like Meditations; but think when I am moſt puzzled, that then my poor weakneſs and Ignorance rance appears moſt.

I believe my Will abſolutely free in all actions barely Moral and Political; and in Divine, that there is a concurrence of my freedome with ſupernatural Grace. If I did not credit the former, I ſhould make my ſelf a Machine, mere Clock-work; and if I diſtruſted the latter, the Book of God and Religion ſeems Impoſture and Deluſion. All my Amuſements ariſe from hence, that (in all appearance) a thouſand to one miſcarry, when (if all had a free uſe of their principles) there ſeems to be a thouſand to one that they ſhould not.

I will now return to what engaged me in this caſual digreſſion, (which yet was ſo great a block in my way, as that I could not well ſtep over it) viz. That I would have all things Sacred, Wiſe and Vertuous, included in the very name of Chriſtian Prieſt. And ſince all the true Philoſophy (Divine and Moral, I mean) that hath ever been ſince Adam, is ſublimated by the refined refined Doctrines of the great Messiah, I would have my Priest a magnifying Mirrour of it all; or in our Saviours words, Be the light of the world, Mat. 5. 14.

'Tis a dull thing to jog through all the stages of this Life in the common Road of Nature, and to live over again the vulgar ordinary Life, that the generality of Men have done since Adam, to be governed by Sense and Convenience, and look no farther than the Sun, Moon or Stars; unless likewise likewiſe we refine our Thoughts and Wiſhes to the laſt degree, mould our groſs Natures anew, and create a difference as great betwixt the vulgar herd of Mankinde and our ſelves, as is betwixt them and Brutes: Let us but truely regard the tranſcendency and nobility of our Function, whoſe Heraldry cannot be Blazon'd beneath Saturn. We may (in this caſe) invert the ſence of our Saviour's words, & ſay, No Prophet has honour but in his own Country.

Mat. 13. 57.

Country. Heaven is the Kingdome from whence we are delegated as Ambaſſadours of Chriſt, not as Reſidents; and we ſhould long to be called back. If we Prieſts are indeed in good earneſt as to the buſineſs of the upper world, 'tis a wonder to me, that our moſt paſſionate Deſires make not good the words of St. Paul literally, in wiſhing to dye dayly. 1 Cor. 15. 31.

The enjoyment of my Saviour in the Heaven of Heavens, in his Humane Nature, Nature, whereby he is graciouſly pleaſed to become not a Mediator only, but Interpreter alſo betwixt my Soul and the incomprehenſible and unintelligible Godhead, raiſes Ecſtatick Languiſhments often in my longing minde to adjourn from this groſs body, and I deſire to depart and to be with Chriſt, Phil. 1. 23.

The Joys of the Heavenly Jeruſalem as they are ſupernatural, ſo contrary to the nature of all other Objects, they encreaſe and magnifie by diſtance, distance; appearing so much the bigger to me, because I cannot see them at all: and when my Eye hath passed the Regions of the Stars, which shew still less and less by length of prospect, all things above them encrease by divine Contemplation, and grow greater and greater, till I am lost and swallowed up in the Infinity of my Maker. The bounds of my Native Gountry begin, where the biggest of the fixt Stars would be invisible, and the Frontiers of Heaven lye beyond yond the Ken of Senſe. Theſe thoughts run me almoſt to raptures unawares. But as I was ſaying, ſince our Faith hath Myſteries beyond the higheſt reach of Plato's Ideas, and that our Doctrines are refined above the pureſt of the great Ariſtotle's Ethicks, and our Precepts of Self-denial, better and more agreeable to Humane Nature than the impracticable Apathie of the Romantick Stoicks; Let us outlive the Wiſdome and Philoſophy of the whole world, and outdo do them all at their own weapon. In order to all which, the ſkill of a Chriſtian Prieſt can no ways appear ſo clearly, as in a perfect contempt of this world; in which there is nothing worth the regards of a wiſe man. 'Tis true, we finde a continual longing in our Souls after ſome thing, which we cannot meet with here; and therefore we trace the ſummum bonum (to no purpoſe) through all the various Mazes of Nature, till the repetition of the moſt delightful objects turns turns nauſeous, and leaves us more to ſeek than when we firſt began: We never run in View of it here (when we are moſt pleaſed) but after all our tireſome Courſes finde in the cloſe, that we have all the while hunted our ſelves weary by a wrong Scent.

Nay more, the very keeneſt pleaſures of Nature, and ſuch as the greateſt Senſualiſts rhodomontade moſt upon, affect us leaſt, when they are greateſt, and glut but Sence to an Inſenſibility; or elſe they

they vaniſh in the embrace, dye in the graſp, leaving not the leaſt track of flavour or ſweetneſs behind, but rather a diſſatisfyed and ſtill craving Appetite.

Beſides all this, the pleaſures of this life concern the brute more properly than the man; nor do the higheſt ſenſible joys touch the better half of humane nature, unleſs it be to its abatement and diſadvantage: for Reaſon is always at the loweſt ebb, if not quite extinct, in acts of the greateſt ſenſuality.

But that the people may verily believe us, when we promise to carry them to a Land flowing with milk and honey; that they may indeed think us in good earnest, when we tell them, that eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him, 1 Cor. 2. 9. let none of us in any fashion cast a longing look backward on the fleshpots of Egypt, in our advances to the heavenly Canaan.

And

And above all, we must express lively the deep sense and stedfast trust we have of heavenly treasure, in being regardless of this worlds wealth, and of the Mammon of unrighteousness: to set any extraordinary value upon which, is in all men irreligious, in a Churchman abominable and odious; 'tis base Idolatry, Col. 3. 5. and blasphemy to Divine Providence; 'tis to unravel the peculiar principle of Christianity, and run retrograde to the steps of the holy Jesus: 'tis to set up golden Calves in Bethel, and by ill example to hinder the people from going to Jeruſalem to worſhip. The vulgar expect, and juſtly too, ſomewhat extraordinary in the Prieſts; but when they ſee them tempted in all things like unto themſelves, and yet not without as great ſin; when the ſame corrupt paſſions and worldly affections appear in them, how ſhould vulgar prejudice and ignorance believe their Doctrines, or not deſpiſe their perſons? We are obliged above all men to approve our ſelves the Diſciples of Chriſt, by imitating in a due meaſure the ſimple meanneſs and plain poverty of our Saviours Life and Converſation; at leaſt (when our accidental grandeur is greateſt) we muſt be poor in Matth. 5. 3. ſpirit. No eager purſuit, or reſtleſs intemperate deſire of wealth or honour, muſt be harboured by us, who are to fix Heb. 11. 16 our whole hopes on another Country; and we ſhould confeſs our ſelves ſtrangers and Pilgrims on this Earth, by the precept and examples of all the holy Prophets and Apoſtles throughout the whole Book of God. But if our heavenly Father have bleſſed us with affluence and increaſe, 'tis impious to let his bounty beget a baſe and ſordid parcimony in us, whom by this he deſigned as diſpenſers and ſtewards of his goodneſs and providence to the poor, the Fatherleſs and the Widow. Pure Jam. 1.27. Religion and undefiled before God, ſaith St. James, is to viſit the father- fatherleſs and widows in their affliction. And St. John, Whoſo hath this Worlds good, and ſeeth his Brother have need, and ſhutteth his bowels of compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? 1 Joh. 3. 17.

We are the poor man's Advocate and Sollicitor with others, and our ſelves are the proper Chanels and Conveyances through whom God derives his refreſhing ſtreams to the needy; and if, in their running thorow our hands, they leave but enough behind them to ſatisfie our own neceſſary wants and occaſions, 'tis all we can in duty call ours.

For the rich therefore among us to be cloſe-handed, and niggardly towards the want of our Brethren, and to fancy we have performed our part in Preaching to ſave their Souls, when at the ſame time we let their Bodies ſtarve; this is a Crime of a deeper die than to fall under the notion of common Avarice; 'tis with Sacrilegious hands to ſtop the current of God's Goodneſs, and to rob the publick ſtock of Providence. But a Diſcourſe of this kinde here, I hope is altogether needleſs; And theſe brief Hints are deſigned more to prevent overſights of this kinde that may happen, than to ſuggeſt any neglects that now are.

I am naturally inclined to Tenderneſs and Pity, and therefore conſider it not in my ſelf as a Vertue. The Pain of a Brute methinks touches my ſenſe in the remote relation of animality: But as I am included in the mass of Mankinde, and am a piece of the Species; so again I think each part of that (in a manner) a piece of me; at least 'tis a member of that whole, whereof I my self am also a part: And therefore I cannot see a Wound, or Hurt, or Grief in another, but I fancy I feel it in my self; and a certain sensible Pain is derived to me by Sympathetick Communication, as I have one share in the whole. And thus methinks in easing the Grief, or want

or pain of another, I apply a Remedy to my own Sore, and assuage the smart of that Pain, which I feel in the great body of Mankinde.

But still farther: the Sufferings of another affect me (yet still) by a nearer and more tender concern, and as I am a Member of Christs Mystical Body, the least Dolour in any other part touches me to the quick, and I easily Sympathize with the wants of a Fellow-Member; otherwise I should fear I had no part with my Saviour, or as a dead Member had loſt all ſenſe of the Divine Life.

And now (Reader) to ſum up all (thô much more might be ſaid on the noble ſubject of this Treatiſe) as I entertained thy firſt glance with a Figure at the beginning, ſo I will cónclude all in preſenting thee a ſlight Pourtrait of a true Clergyman.

He is one that fears God and the King, and meddles not with them that are given to change; he believes and can prove, that the King is Head of Church

Church and State immediately under God, and that He is accountable to none but Heaven. He zealously asserts the Royal Prerogative, and reveres the Fundamental Laws of the Land, and that for Conscience sake; yet neither basely fawns, nor busily rails himself (the better trick of the two) into Preferment. The Word of God is his Compass, and his Conscience the Needle by which he steers as steady a Course in the most tempestuous, as in the most serene and calmest calmeſt Weather. He knows his Commiſſion runs high, and his Character to be great, as he is the Ambaſſadour of the King of Heaven; and therefore he dares not ſtoop out of baſe fear to any unwarrantable compliance to the diſhonour of his Maſter, as alſo pretends not a falſe Licence by an aſſuming Pride to affront the Princes that give him Audience. If by his Prudence and Conduct his Ambaſſage meets with ſucceſs, and anſwers the deſires of his Maſter, he is joyful, joyful; if with neglect or contempt, he rails not: but at his recalling home (he knows) must make his Report at his Master's Court. If any miscarriage have hapned through his folly or fear, he knows very well that the punishment is Capital. He strives not to make himself rever'd by a starcht Deportment, affected Gravity, or a mortified Grimace; but by acts of Piety, Loyalty, and Charity: and his Motto is Semper Idem, as having the same meek even Temper of Minde when

when Biſhop, as when Vicar. If he be not very Learned, he is nevertheleſs honeſt and painful in his Calling: if he be, he is not aſſuming or dogmatical, much leſs an ill-bred pedantick Opiniator. He is dutiful to his Dioceſan, and obedient to his Ordinary; and his Converſation towards his Flock is an equal mixture of Affability, Gravity, and Meekneſs. He carefully calculates his Sermons for the Meridian of his Pariſhioners, and reproves their Irregularities with awe and and reverence from the Pulpit, where 'tis the word of God; but with a more familiar Gentleneſs in private Converſe, where 'tis his own. If by chance he light into Company profane or obſcene, he expreſſes a diſlike rather grave than moroſe; and can tell when to reprove with Raillery, when with Severity: He knows too, when to rebuke one Oath will occaſion half a ſcore, and an affront to the Parſon to boot; this boiſterous rude company of all he ſhuns, ſhuns, where contempt muſt needs follow both ways. He can eaſily and adjuſtly act the Scholar or the Gentleman, as occaſion requires; but his general Converſation hath a due mixture of both. At Table his diſcourſe is the moſt ſavoury Sawce, and here he is liberal and hoſpitable, as knowing very well that Principles of Obedience and Conformity work beſt, when they are taken down in good Meat and Drink gratis. He is dutiful and thankful to his Patron, yet cannot connive connive at, much leſs flatter his Vice: In a word, he hath true Chriſtian Courage, and fears not man that can kill the body and do no more.
